PREFACE

The early history of Peninsular India beyond the great barrier of mountain and forest that separates the vast Indo-Gangetic plain from the valleys of the Godavari, Krishna and the Kaveri has been dealt with by many scholars, notably Fleet, Rice, Bhandarkar and Debreuil. But the paucity of data stood in the way of an adequate treatment of the period that intervened between the disintegration of the Sātavāhana monarchy and the rise of the Imperial Calukyas. The three odd centuries that separated the last great Sātavāhana from the first Pulakeśin has been regarded by Smith as a "Blank in history." As early as 1895, Sir R. G. Bhandarkar observed that for some three centuries after the extinction of the Andhra (i.e. Sātavāhana) dynasty "we have no specific information about the dynasties that ruled over the country (i.e. the Deccan)." Smith observed in 1924, "It is still true to say that practically the political history of the Deccan begins in the middle of the sixth century with the rise of the Chalukya dynasty" (E Hist. Ind., 4th ed., p. 440). My aim has been to bridge the gulf between the Sātavāhana and the Calukya periods. The plan and purpose of the present volume have been explained in the Introduction, and little more need be said by way of a Preface. It will be seen that the author deals with the successors of the Sātavāhanas, who held sway in the vast region of the Deccan, mainly inhabited by the Telugu and Kanarese speaking peoples, before the foundation of the Calukya empire. It is contemplated to publish another volume which will be concerned with the dynasties that rose on the ruins of the Sātavāhana empire in the north.

In the present volume, I have tried to develop some of the views expressed in my monographs and papers previously published. Results of most recent investigations have been incorporated in the Addenda et Corrigenda. My thanks are due to Dr. S. P. Mookerjee, the illustrious Vice-Chancellor of Calcutta University (1934-38), and to Dr. H. C. Raychaudhuri, Carmichael Professor and Head of the Department of Ancient Indian History and Culture, Calcutta University. The encouragement of Dr. Mookerjee and the valuable suggestions of Prof. Raychaudhuri have been of great help to me in writing the following pages. My acknowledgments are also due to Mr. J. Chakravorti, Registrar, Calcutta University, and to Mr. D. Ganguli, Superintendent of the Calcutta University Press.

INTRODUCTION

The aim of the author of the present volume is to give a detailed account of the dynasties that ruled in Lower Deccan after the decline of the Sātavāhanas till the country was conquered by the Calukyas. The volume has been divided into two parts ; Part I deals with the Eastern Districts, that is to say, the Andhra region, and Part II with the Western Districts, that is, the Karṇāṭa region. In the second volume of this work, which is in course of preparation, the author proposes to deal with the dynasties that succeeded the Sātavāhanas in Upper Deccan.

The term Deccan has been used in this work in a limited sense. It is a familiar corruption of the Sanskrit word dakṣiṇa meaning south. It “ may be, and sometimes is, extended so as to cover the whole of India south of the Narmadā ; but is usually understood as designating a more limited territory in which Malabar and the Tamil countries of the extreme south are not included ” (Smith, E. Hist. Ind., 4th ed., p. 439). The Nanaghat record which describes the husband of Nāganikā as dakṣiṇāpatha-pati, a Nasik inscription in which Vāsiṣṭhīputra Pulumāvi is called dakṣiṇāpath-eśvara and the Junagad inscription in which the Sātavāhana contemporary of Rudradāman (c. 130-150 A.D.) is called dakṣiṇāpatha-pati appear to prove that the Sātavāhanas called themselves “ lord of the Deccan.” There is however absolutely no proof that the Far South was ever under the direct possession of the Sātavāhana kings. Dakṣiṇāpatha, over which the Sātavāhanas claimed suzerainty, thus appears to signify the Deccan in a limited sense.

In the eastern part of Lower Deccan, the direct rule of the Sātavāhanas seems not to have extended far beyond the Andhra-country, that is to say, beyond the Telugu-speaking area. In the western part, the Cuṭu Śātakarṇi branch of the Śātavāhana dynasty is known to have ruled over the country which had Banavāsī (in the North Kanara district) for its capital, that is to say, over the northern part of the modern Kanarese-speaking area.

(The Andhra people and their country are mentioned many times in literature ; but history of the Andhra region, based on epigraphic evidence, only begins from the third century B.C., i.e., the time of the Maurya emperor Aśoka. At the time of Aśoka, Lower Deccan formed a part of the Maurya empire and the Maurya frontier certainly extended in the south as far as the Pennar river near Nellore, as only the Tamil kingdoms of the Ceras, Colas and the Pāṇḍyas have been distinguished as pracaṃta (border state) from the viṣṭa (dominions) of the king, and as Aśokan inscriptions have been found on rocks as far south as the Chitaldrug district of Mysore. The Andhras are mentioned in the thirteenth Rock Edict of Aśoka in the list of subordinate peoples that lived in the dominions (idha rāja-visayaṃhi) of the king. After the strength of the Maurya empire had waned, the people of Andhradeśa appears to have assumed independence.

A king named Kubiraka (= Kubera) ¹ has been mentioned in two inscriptions discovered at Bhattiprolu in the Repalle taluka of the Guntur district (Lüders, List, Nos. 1335, 1338). According to Bühler (J.R.A.S., 1892, p. 602), the Bhattiprolu inscriptions belong to the period immediately following that of Aśoka, i.e., to about 200 B.C. It is therefore possible that king Kubiraka fought successfully with the weak successors of Aśoka who died sometime before 230 B.C., and liberated the Andhra country from the Maurya yoke. Unfortunately we know next to nothing about this king.

Epigraphy is silent as regards the Andhra country for a long time after Kubiraka. Only about the second century of the Christian era we find the country occupied by kings belonging to the family known in epigraphy as the Sātavāhana. A number of coins and inscriptions of the Later Sātavāhanas has been discovered in the Andhra region. The most powerful among them were Vāsiṣṭhīputra Pulumāvi and Gautami-putra Yajña Śātakarṇi. The date of these kings is a disputed question ; but two points seem certain in this respect. (1) King Vāsiṣṭhīputra Pulumāvi could not be far removed in time from (but was possibly for some time a contemporary of) the Śaka Satrap Rudradāman who is known to have ruled from c. 130 to c. 150 A.D. The mention of Barthana (Paithan in the Aurangabad district) as the capital of Sīriptolemaios (siri-Pulumāvi, contemporary of Tiastênes = Caṣṭana who for some time ruled conjointly with his grandson Rudradāman) by Ptolemy (c. 140 A.D.) is also very important in ascertaining the date of Vāsiṣṭhīputra Pulumāvi in about the middle of the second century A.D. (2) According to the evidence of palaeography, there could not have been a great interval between the reign of Pulumāvi and that of Yajña. The suggestion of Kṛishṇasastrī that the second year of Candra Śāti (a successor of Yajña) is equivalent to A.D. 210 is also important in this connection. It is therefore very probably certain that Yajña ended his rule not long after A.D. 200, and Yajña was the last great king of his dynasty (see infra, Sections I and III of the chapter on the Pallavas).

The local ruling families of South-Eastern Deccan either ruling as subordinate rulers or governors, such as the Śālaṅkāyanas, Br̥hatphalāyanas, Pallavas and the Ikṣvākus who remained loyal to the Sātavāhanas at the time of Pulumāvi and Yajña Śātakarṇi appear to have gradually raised their head and supplanted the weak successors of Yajña. From palaeographic consideration it appears that the Ikṣvākus were the first to grow powerful in the Kistna-Guntur region and to throw off Śātavāhana suzerainty about the third decade of the third century. The performance of Aśvamedha, Vājapeya and other Vedic sacrifices by the Ikṣvāku king Cāṃtamūla I clearly shows that the Ikṣvākus were no longer feudatory to the Śātavāhanas who were therefore ousted from the Kistna-Guntur area before the time of this king. The successors of the Ikṣvākus in the sovereignty of this area appear to have been the Brhatphalāyanas and the Pallavas. The Pallavas became very powerful about the end of the third and beginning of the fourth century. The earliest Pallava epigraphs which appear to belong to the first half of the fourth century show that the Pallavas were at the time master of Andhrāpatha as well as the Bellary region. Pallava headquarters in the Āndhra country at the time of Śivaskandavarman, a performer of Aśvamedha and other sacrifices, were at Dhamñakada (Dhānyakaṭaka). Their supremacy in Andhradeśa appears to have broken down owing to the rise of the Śālaṅkāyanas of Veṅgī (W. Godavari district) and the Ānandas of Kandarapura (Guntur district). Devavarman, the Śālaṅkāyana performer of the Aśvamedha sacrifice, possibly reigned not long after Pallava Śivaskandavarman. The evidence of the Kanteru plates proves that the Later Śālaṅkāyanas became master of much of the territories that were once under the Ikṣvākus, Brhatphalāyanas and the Pallavas. After the collapse of the Śālaṅkāyana power, the Viṣṇukundins gradually became master of the whole of Andhradeśa. When the Calukyas established themselves at Piṣṭapura in the beginning of the seventh century, the Viṣṇukundins appear to have struggled hard with them for existence. But gradually their power collapsed and the country passed to the possession of the Calukyas.

It must not however be thought that these dynasties appeared one after another on the political stage of the Andhra country. The Śālaṅkāyanas, as we shall see, were most probably in possession of the district round Veṅgī even in the age of Ptolemy (c. 140), when the Sātavāhanas were apparently the suzerain of Andhradeśa. The Greek geographer possibly also refers to the capital of the Br̥hatphalāyanas in the present Masulipatam area. Excepting the Viṣṇukundins, all the earlier dynasties that reigned in South-Eastern Deccan after the Sātavāhanas seem to have ruled more or less contemporaneously.

In Part I of the present volume, I have given an account of the Īkṣvākus, Br̥hatphalāyanas, Ānandas, Śālaṅkāyanas and the Viṣṇukundins. I have also dealt with the Pallavas who were for some time the supreme power in Andhradeśa.

In Part II of this volume, I have tried to give an account of the dynasties that succeeded the Sātavāhanas in the western part of Lower Deccan. From the breakdown of the Cuṭu Śātakarṇi power up to the rise of the Calukyas, the principal ruling dynasty in South-Western Deccan was that of the Kadambas. I have not included in this account the history of the Gangas and the Bāṇas who ruled from places far to the south of the country ruled by the Sātavāhanas. I have included however the Kekayas who ruled in the northern part of Mysore, which most probably formed a part of the later Sātavāhana dominions. Since my account is limited in circa 200-650 A.D., I have not discussed a few minor feudatory families (e.g., the Sendrakas) whose early history is wrapped up in obscurity.

In placing this work before students of Indian history, I humbly request them to consider the new points I have been able to light upon in these pages. I have tried to establish a relation between the two known Ānanda kings on the basis of the passage hiranyagarbh-odbhav-odbhava of the Mattepad plates. I have also tried to settle the genealogy and chronology of the Śālaṅkāyanas and the Viṣṇukundins, in which, as

I have shown, mistakes have been made permanent by previous writers. The theory of the existence of a king called Sana in the Kistna district in the second or third century A.D. has been discussed and found to be untenable. The date of Pallava Śivaskandavarman has been fixed on the basis of the gradual development of inscriptional Prakrit in early South Indian inscriptions. In dealing with the [Early] Pallavas and the [Early] Kadambas, I have tried not to be led astray from the terra firma of solid facts by that eagerness for theorising which is so common among certain recent writers on the early history of those dynasties. The real significance of the passage hiranyagarbh-odbhava has been correctly pointed out. In interpreting terms like āyukta, vallabha, hastikośa, vyāpṛta adhikāra-purusa and others, I have spared no pains to utilise epigraphic as well as lexicographic and classical literature to the full. I have also made full use of the Epic, Purānic and Smṛti literature in explaining passages like avasita-viridha-divya, hiranyagarbha and others.

PART I

CHAPTER I

THE IKṢVĀKUS

THE SOUTHERN IKṢVĀKUS.

Some Prakrit ¹ inscriptions of the Ikṣvākus of Eastern Deccan have been discovered at Jaggayyapetta in the Nandigram taluka of the Kistna district (Ind. Ant., XI, p. 257 ff.), and at Nagarjunikonda in the Palnad taluka of the Guntur district (Ep. Ind., XX, p. 1 ff.) of the Madras Presidency. Formerly, Burgess expressed the opinion that these inscriptions belong to about the 3rd or 4th century A.D. "but are probably earlier." Bühler and, following him, Vogel who has recently edited the Nagarjunikonda inscriptions ascribe the Ikṣvāku records to the 3rd century of the Christian era. Like all early Prakrit inscriptions, the Nagarjunikonda and Jaggayyapetta records of the Ikṣvākus express compound consonants with single letters. This characteristic shows that these records are earlier than the Early Pallava grants which express double or conjunct consonants by more than one letter and appear to belong to about the first quarter of the 4th century A.D. (see my views in Ind. Cult., I, p. 498 ff. ; Journ. Ind. Hist., XIII, p. 297 ff. ; and infra). The Ikṣvāku inscriptions, therefore, almost certainly belong to about the middle and second half of the 3rd century A.D. (vide infra).

Ikṣvāku as the name of a king possibly occurs once in the R̥gveda (X. 60.4). The word there may, however, be also taken as an epithet of the name of another person, Asamāti, whom the Jaminīyabrāhmaṇa (III. 167), Bṛhaddevatā (VII. 35 ff.), etc., take to be an Ikṣvāku prince. Ikṣvāku in the Atharvaveda (XIV. 39.9) seems to be regarded as an ancient hero. According to Macdonell and Keith (Ved. Ind., s.v.) the Ikṣvākus were originally a branch of the Puru family. Zimmer places them (Alt. Leben, pp. 104, 130) on the Upper Indus; the Vedic Index, however, thinks that the Ikṣvākus may well have been somewhat further east even in the Vedic period. Later Ikṣvākus are connected chiefly with Ayodhyā, the capital of the Kośala janapada. We have long lists of Ikṣvāku kings in the Purāṇas and the epics. But we do not know of any relation between the Ikṣvākus of Ayodhyā and the Ikṣvākus of the Madras Presidency. Were the Southern Ikṣvākus a branch of the famous Ikṣvāku family of Northern India, which migrated and eventually carved out a principality in Eastern Deccan?

It is possible that the epithet ikhāku-rāja-pravara-risi-satapabhava-vamśa-sambhava, applied to Lord Buddha in an inscription of the Southern Ikṣvāku king Virapurisadata, refers to a claim of the king to belong to the same family as the Lord who, according to traditions, belonged to the famous Ikṣvāku family of Kośala (Majjhima-Nikāya, II. 124).¹ It is also interesting to note that the Southern Ikṣvākus were matrimonially related to the Southern Kekayas, as indeed, according to the Rāmāyaṇa, the Ikṣvākus of Ayodhyā were to the Kekayas of Girivraja in the Punjab. But, in considering the question of the relation between the Northern and the Southern Ikṣvākus, we have also to remember the views of Caldwell regarding the nature of the Aryanisation of South India. "The Aryan immigrants to the South," he says, "appear to have been Brahmanical priests and instructors, rather than Kshatriya soldiers, and the kings of the Pāṇḍyas, Cholas, Kalingas, and other Dravidians, appear to have been chiefly Dravidian chieftains whom their Brahmanical preceptors and spiritual directors dignified with Aryan titles, and taught to imitate and emulate the grandeur and cultivated tastes of the Solar, Lunar and the Agnikula races of kings" (Comp. Gramm., 2nd ed., Intro., p. 115). This view is certainly correct in some cases. As we know, the Īhadis of Mymensingh (Bengal), a tribe closely allied to the Garos, have, only the other day, been allowed to wear upavīta and to bear the ancient and illustrious name of the Haihaya Ksatriyas.¹ It is therefore not easy to determine whether the Southern Ikṣvākus were actually Aryan immigrants from the north (which is not impossible) or a Hinduised aboriginal family of rulers who appropriated the name of the most glorious royal family of ancient India.² The question is, moreover, a little further complicated by the points brought to our notice by Przy-luski in an interesting paper in the Bulletin de la Société de Linguistique, 1926, p. 83.¹

The Sanskrit word ikṣvāku means "gourd." It is interesting that some Austro-Asiatic peoples call themselves issue either of a gourd or a melon, of which every seed gave birth to a man (Bonifacy, Cours d'ethnographie indo-chinoise, p. 45 ; Cochbrane, The Shans, I, p. 120). This myth seems to have passed into Indian tradition, in which Sumati, queen of king Sagara of Ayodhyā (to whom 60,000 sons were promised), gave birth to a gourd, and from that gourd came out 60,000 children (Rām., I. 38 ; Mahābhā., III. 106 ; Bhāg. Pur., IX. 88). The Austro-Asiatic myth of gourd-ancestor seems to have been transmitted in the legends of Sumati and Ikṣvāku who have been placed at Ayodhyā. But as is often the case in Indian literature, it appears that, in the second case, the authors have modified the myth for Kekayas, Mālavas, Śibis, Guptas, Mauryas and the Aśvakas and stories of the sons of Viśvāmitra, and of Rāma, Vijaya, the sage Bāvara and others may all be very important in dealing with the Aryanisation of Southern India. But while we have reliable evidence of the migration of the Mālavas (= Maloi of the Greeks ; on the lower valley of the Rāvi in Alexander's time) and the Śibis (= Siboi of the Greeks, in Alexander's time in the Shorkot region of the Jhang district, Punjab), and also of the Mauryas and the Guptas, from north to south—there is no satisfactory evidence as regards the migration of the other families or tribes. The mention of the Mālavas (= Mālavas) as living in the vicinity of Puṣkara (near Ajmere) in an inscription of Usavadāta (Ind. Ant., 1918, p. 75), the find of coins with legend Mālavānām jayaḥ in the southern part of the Jaipur State (Rapson, Indian Coins, § 51) and the name of the modern province of Mālwa, prove conclusively the southerly course of the Mālavas. As regards the Śibis, we may, however, challenge the authority of the tradition recorded in the Daśakumārācārīta (Madhya, Ch. VI) about their settlement on the Kāveri and their connection with the greater Colas as is claimed in the Udayendram plates (S. I. I., II, p. 382) ; but the discovery of their coins at Nagari leaves no doubt that the Śibi tribe marched at least as far south as the Chitorgadh district of Rajputana. It can hardly be doubted that the Mauryas of Konkan and the Guptas (= Guptas) of Guttala were branches respectively of the famous imperial dynasties of those names that ruled at Pāṭaliputra. The cases of the other tribes or families however, though not impossible, cannot be proved at the present state of our knowledge.

the sake of ennobling it. The epic poets could not be pleased with the idea that a gourd had given birth to a glorious dynasty. Ikṣvāku, which properly means a gourd in Sanskrit, appears, therefore, to have been personified as a hero, son of Vaivasvata Manu (Rām., I, 70, vs 20-21; Mahābhā, I, 75, vs. 31-40) or of Sage Gautama (Rockhill, Life of the Buddha, pp. 10-11). In a story of the Dul-va, analysed by Rockhill, attempt has been made to explain the name Ikṣvāku by the fact that the children of the sage Gautama were found in a field of sugarcane (iksu).

If we think, now, that the Ikṣvākus were originally an Aryan tribe, this Austro-Asiatic influence possibly shows that they were closely connected with the aborigines of the country, wherein there was a strong Austro-Asiatic element, and consequently shared some of their beliefs and traditions. Relation, matrimonial and otherwise, of Aryan ruling families with the aborigines is frequently illustrated in the epic and the Purāṇic literature. That the Aryan families which migrated to South India had to accept some aboriginal customs is also clear from the fact that very early authorities on smṛti had to acknowledge and distinguish between the Aryan customs of Northern and those of Southern India. Baudhāyana, who lived long before Christ¹ and is a very great authority, speaks in his Dharmasūtra (I, ii, 1-4) of mātula-pitṛsvasṛ-duhitṛ-gamana (i.e., sexual relation with daughters of mother's brother and father's sister) as an established custom in the South. In this connection, it is interesting to note that the Ikṣvāku king Virapurisadata had, among others, three queens who were the daughters of his father's sisters.²

¹ According to Bühler (Ind Stud., No III, p 15 ff.) the date of the Sūtras of Baudhāyana is the sixth century B.C. Keith however thinks that they are of a somewhat later date (Camb Hist Ind., I, p 140, note 3).

² Instances of marriage with the daughter of one's maternal uncle may be found in the history of the Rāṣṭrakūṭa kings of the Deccan. Kīrṇa II married Lakṣmī, daughter of his mātula Raṇaviṅraha Śankaragaṇa; Rāṣṭrakūṭa Indra III also married Vījāmbā,

It has been suggested that the capital of the Southern Ikṣvākus was probably at Dhānyakaṭaka and that "the remains of Nagarjunikonda can possibly represent the ancient capital of Dhaññakaṭaka which archæologists have sought both at Dharanīkoṭa near Amarāvātī and at Bezvāḍa." But the remains seem to represent a city called Vijayapurī.

It must be noticed that the country, which according to the evidence of the Nagarjunikonda and Jaggayyapetta inscriptions appears to have belonged to the Ikṣvākus in about the middle of the 3rd century A.D., is known to have belonged to the Sātavāhanas in the 2nd century. After the decline of the Ikṣvākus, this region passed into the hands of the Pallavas of Kāñcī. The Mayidavolu (Guntur district) Prakrit grant (Ep. Ind., VI, p. 86) of the Pallava Yuvamahārāja Śivaskandavarman, records an order of the Yuvamahārāja to the vāpata (vyāpṛta, i.e., governor) of Dhamñakada (Dhānyakaṭaka) to execute the grant of a village called Viripāra situated in the Andhāpatha (Andhrāpatha). Another Prakrit grant of the same age belonging to the reign of the Pallava king viḥaya-Skandavarman was discovered in the Guntur district. According to Prof. Dubreuil, king viḥaya-Skandavarman of this inscription is the same as the Yuva-mahārāja Śivaskandavarman of the Mayidavolu grant. Whatever the identification be worth (vide infra), it is clear that the Ikṣvākus were ousted from the Kistna-Guntur region by the Pallavas of Kāñcī.

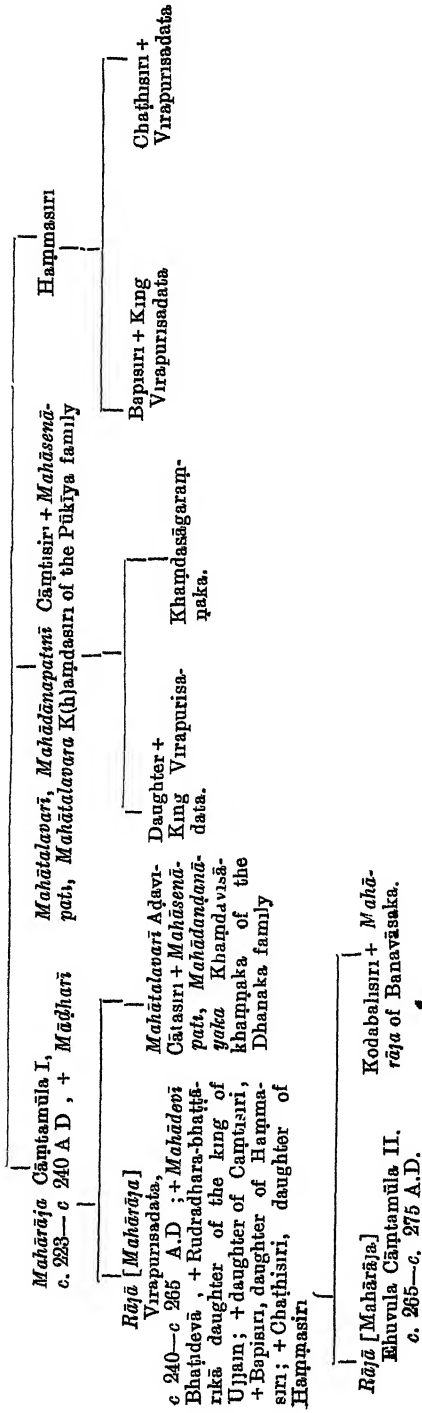

We cannot neglect to mention in this connection the rise of the Br̥hatphalāyanas in the district round Masulipatam. It is, however, certain that the weak successors of the great Cāṃtamūla and his son Virapurisadata were finally swept away by the Pallavas of Kāñcī at about the end of the 3rd century A.D. But it is quite possible that the rise of the daughter of his mātula Ammaṇadeva (Anat̥gadeva) of the Kalacuri family (B N History of the Rashtrakutas, pp. 77-8) The custom is prevalent in the Deccan even at the present time.

Br̥hatphalāyanas had a large share in weakening the power of the Ikṣvākus.

An inscription of about the 5th century A.D. (Ep. Carnat., XI, p. 142), discovered at Anaji in the Davanegere taluka of the Chitaldrug district (Mysore), speaks of a Kekaya prince, named Śivanandavarman who claims, for his family, matrimonial connection with the saintly kings of the Ikṣvāku line. Cf. parama-māheśvaraḥ mātā-pitṛ-pādabhaktaḥ ātreya-gotraḥ soma-vaṃś-odbhavaḥ ikṣvā-kubhir=api rājarṣibhiḥ kṛt-āvāha-vivāhānām kekayānām kule jātaḥ śivanandavarmā. This fact possibly goes to show that the Ikṣvāku dynasty lingered long as a ruling power, though unimportant in comparison with the neighbouring royal families.

CĀMTAMŪLA I.¹

Only three kings of the Ikṣvāku family of Eastern Deccan are so far known. The first of them is Mahārāja Vāsiṣṭhīputra Cāmtamūla. We have not yet any inscription of the time of this king. But from the epithets applied to his name in the inscriptions of his son and grandson, he appears to have been a very great and powerful monarch.

Vāsiṣṭhīputra Ikṣvāku Cāmtamūla is credited with the performance of the agnihotra, agniṣṭoma, vājapeya and aśva-medha sacrifices. It must be noted that the Vājapeya and Aśvamedha sacrifices could be performed only by very powerful kings. According to the Śatapatha-Brāhmaṇa (V. 1, 1, 13)² the performance of the former bestowed on the performer a superior kind of kingship called sāmrājya, while the Rājasūya conferred merely the ordinary royal dignity called rājya. According to the Āpastamba Śrauta-sūtra (XX, i. 1), only the sārvabhauma kings (rājā) could perform the Aśvamedha sacrifice.¹ King Cāṃtamūla, therefore, could not have been a weak ruler, subordinate to some Sātavāhana emperor. The celebration of Aśvamedha by the Ikṣvāku king possibly shows his success against a Sātavāhana overlord. Cāṃtamūla I is also said to have been a giver of crores of gold, thousands of cows (or bullocks) and thousands of ploughs.² The king was evidently a Brahmanical Hindu. The deity he was devoted to is mentioned as virūpākṣapati-mahasena. It may be noted that the Kadambas and the Calukyas also referred to their families, in their inscriptions, as mahāsena-parigṛhīta. Mahāsena (Skanda), in the Ikṣvāku inscriptions, has been called virūpākṣa-pati, "lord of the Virūpākṣas." Vogel takes the term virūpākṣa in the sense of the hosts of which Skanda is the lord or leader. The word indicates a class of snakes in a snake-charm in the Vinayapiṭaka (ed. Oldenberg, II, p 110). Virūpākṣa is an ordinary epithet applied to Rākṣasas and other spirits in Mahābhā. and Rām. (Hopkins, Epic Mythology, p 39.)

King Cāṃtamūla had at least two sisters. One of them named Cāṃtasirī (or Cāṃtisirī = Śāntaśrī or Śāntīśrī ?) was given in marriage to Vāsiṣṭhīputra Khamdasirī or Kamda^o (Skandaśrī) of the Pūkīya family.³ Khamdasirī has been called

² It is possible that his epithet aneka hiraṇya-koti-go-satasahasra-hala-satasahasra-padāy refers to the fact that the king performed many times several of the sixteen mahādānas, such as Hiraṇyagarbha, Hiraṇyakāma-henu, Hiraṇyāśva, Hiraṇyāśva-ratha Gosahasra and Pañcalāṅgula, enumerated in the Purāṇas

Mahāsenāpati and Mahātalavara, and his wife, the Ikṣvāku princess Cāmṭasārī, Mahātalavarī and Mahādāna-patinī. The term mahāsenāpati ("great chief of the army," i.e., general) denoted feudatory chieftains in charge of the rāṣṭras (districts) at the time of the Sātavāhanas¹; the same meaning seems to be applicable in the present case also. Vogel is, therefore, inclined to render the term by "duke." Mahātalavaras are mentioned in early Jain works along with the eighteen gaṇa-rājas. So, this word must also be taken as a title of nobility (cf. Kalpasūtra, ed. Jacobi, 61, ll. 21-25). A Sanskrit commentary on the Kalpasūtra, called Subodhikā, by Vinayavijaya (Nirnaysagar Press ed., leaf 60, lines 6-7) explains the term talavara as tuṣṭa-bhūpala-pradatta-paṭṭa-bandha-vibhūṣita-rājasthānīya. In the Punjab there is a subdivision of the Khetris (Kṣatriyas) called the Tālwār (Ep. Ind., XX, p. 7, n. 1). Vogel suggests a connection of the word talavara with Tamil talavāy (general), talaiyāri (village-watchman) or Kanarese taḷavara, taḷavāra (watchman, beadle). It seems from the Subodhikā and these inscriptions that the Mahātalavaras were provincial governors or subordinate rulers. I, therefore, think that the word is connected with Tamil talaivan, which means a king, ruler or governor (Tamil Lexicon, pub. Madras University, s.v.). The word, which is originally Dravidian, evidently penetrated into North India also. In addition to the instance of the Tālwārs of the Punjab, it may be said that it is obviously identical with the mysterious word taravara, which along with the word mahāpratīhāra (great chamberlain) is found on a clay sealing excavated by Bloch at Basarh (Arch. Surv. Rep., 1903-04, p. 108, Pl. XL. 6). Talāra, evidently the same as talavara, is mentioned in the Chirwa inscription (A.D. 1273) of Guhila Samarasimha of Mewar. According to this epigraph, one Kṣema was made talāra of Citrakūṭa by Jaitrasimha, and after him one Madana was made talāra of the same place by the Pradhāna Rājasimha (Bhandarkar, List, No. 579).

At least two children—a son and a daughter—were born to Cāṃtisiri. The name of her son was Khamdasāgaram-ṇaka¹ (Skanda-sāgara ?). We do not know her daughter's name; but she is known to have been married to her cousin, king Virapurisadata. In an inscription of Nagarjunikonda, Virapurisadata has been called Cāṃtisiri's apano jāmātuka, i.e., own son-in-law.

Another uterine sister of king Cāṃtamūla was Haṃmasiri (Harmyaśrī ?) who had two daughters, Bapisirinikā (Vāpīśrī ?) and Chaṭhisiri (Ṣaṭhīśrī ?). Both Bapisiri and Chaṭhisiri were given in marriage to their cousin, Virapurisadata, son and successor of king Cāṃtamūla I.

Two children of king Cāṃtamūla are known from inscriptions. One of them is his son from Mādharī (Māṭharī), named Virapurisadata, who succeeded him on the throne. The other is his daughter, Mahātalavarī Aḍavi-Cātasiri.² The princess was given in marriage to the Mahāsenāpati, Mahādaṇḍanāyaka Khamdavisākhamṇaka (Skandaviśākha ?) who belonged to the family of the Dhanakas. Both the sister and the brother appear to have been staunch Buddhists, whereas their father was a performer of Vedic sacrifices like agnihotra, agniṣtoma, vājaṇeya and aśvamedha.

In one of the Nagarjunikonda inscriptions dated in the 6th regnal year of Virapurisadata, we have a record of the benefactions of one Mahāsenāpatinī Cula(kṣudra)-Cāṃtisirinikā (i.e., Cāṃtisiri the younger) who was married to the Mahāsenāpati, Mahātalavara, Vāsiṣṭhīputra Khamdacalikireṃmaṇaka of the Hiraṇyaka family. The name of the Mahāsenāpatinī seems to indicate that she was an Ikṣvāku princess ; but she is explicitly called kulahakānaṃ bālikā, i.e., a girl born in the family of the Kulahakas. She therefore appears to me to have been the daughter of an Ikṣvāku princess married to a Kulahaka chief.

III

VIRAPURISADATA (VĪRAPURUṢADATTA).¹

King Cāntamūla I, as we have already said, was succeeded on the Ikṣvāku throne by his son Virapurisadata. We have a number of inscriptions dated in the regnal years of this king. His inscriptions have been found at the Buddhist sites of Nagarjunikonda and Jāggayyapetta. The records begin with an adoration to Bhagavān Samyaksambuddha, i.e., Lord Buddha.

Inscriptions appear to tell us of five queens of king Virapurisadata. Two of them were Bapisiri and Chaṭhisiri, daughters of the king's aunt (father's sister) Haṃmasiri. We have already seen that Baudhāyana sanctions marriage with daughters of maternal uncles and paternal aunts for the inhabitants of the South. A daughter of his other aunt Cāmtisiri was also a queen of the king. Another queen appears to have been the Mahādevī Rudradharabhaṭṭārikā, who has been described in the inscriptions as Ujanikāmahārābālikā. Vogel is inclined to correct the passage as Ujanikā-mahārāja-bālikā. This may not be impossible, as in the Nagarjunikonda inscriptions there are signs of careless engraving. Vogel then identifies Ujanikā with the famous city of Ujjayinī (Prakrit Ujeni), mentioned by the Greek geographer Ptolemy (Geography, VII, i, §63) as Ozêné and as the capital of Trastênes (Caṣṭana). The name of queen Rudradharā and those of the kings of Caṣṭana's line, such as

Rudradāman (I and II), Rudrasena (I, II and III) and Rudrasimha (I, II, III and IV) may also indicate the possibility of Vogel's theory. Though there is no name like Rudradhara (of whom the queen might have been supposed to have been a sister or a daughter) in the genealogy of the Śakas of Ujjain, two kings having names beginning with Rudra reigned in the third century A.D.

1. Rudrasena I, circa Śaka 122-135 (A.D. 200-213).
2. Rudrasena II, circa Śaka 176-196 (A.D. 254-274).

It is not altogether impossible that the Ikṣvāku queen was related to one of these kings. It may be noted in this connection that a Nagarjunikonda inscription records the pious gift of a Śaka girl, which fact possibly shows that the Ikṣvākus were friendly towards the Śakas. The currency of dīnāri-māśakas in their kingdom seems also to indicate their relation with the north. The dīnāra, according to numismatists, was a gold coin weighing about 124 grains, first struck by the Kuṣāṇa kings (of whom Caṣṭana is generally supposed to have been a feudatory) in the first century A.D. in imitation of the Roman gold denarius (Bhandarkar, Carmichael Lectures, 1921, p. 181).

In an inscription of Ehuṇṇa Cāṃtamūla II, son and successor of Virapurisadata, the name of the reigning king's mother is mentioned as Mahādevī Bhaṭṭidevā. She appears, therefore, to have been another queen of Virapurisadata.

Besides the son Ehuṇṇa Cāṃtamūla, king Virapurisadata is known to have had a daughter named Kodabalisiri who is said to have been the Mahādevī (queen) of the Vanavāsaka-mahārāja. Vanavāsaka-mahārāja appears to mean the king of Banavāsī, now in the North Kanara district of the Bombay Presidency. Banavāsī is known to have been the capital of the Cuṭu Śātakarṇis and afterwards of the Kadambas. Scholars think that the Kadambas began to rule at Banavāsī about the middle of the fourth century A.D. (Anc. Hist. Dec., p. 95 ; Kadambakula, p. 18 ; also infra.). We should also note in this connection that the Chandravallī Prakrit record of the earliest Kadamba king Mayūraśarman (Mys. Arch. Surv., AR, 1929, p. 50) which expresses compound consonants by more than one letter is obviously later than the time of the issuers of the Nagarjunikonda and Jaggayyapetta records. It is therefore not impossible that a Cuṭu-Śātakarṇi king of Banavāsī was the husband of the Ikṣvāku princess Kodabalīsiri, daughter of Virapurisadata whose inscriptions have been ascribed to the third century A.D. Matrimonial alliance with the powerful houses of Ujjain and Banavāsī certainly strengthened the Ikṣvākus at the time of this monarch.

King Māṭharīputra Virapurisadata ruled at least for more than nineteen years. We have inscriptions dated in the 6th, 14th, 15th, 18th and the 20th year of his reign. The following are some important inscriptions discovered at Nagarjunikonda and dated in his sixth regnal year :—

I. Record of the erection of a pillar at the Mahācetiya of Lord Buddha by Cāṃtasiri who was the uterine sister of king Vāsisthīputra Cāṃtamūla I, aunt (pituchā, i.e., father's sister) of king Māḍharīputra Virapurisadata, wife of the Pūkiya chief Vāsisthīputra Khamdasiri and mother of Khamdasāgaramnaka. The act is said to have been done "for the attainment of welfare and happiness by all the world."

II. Record of the erection of a stone-pillar by Bapisirinikā, daughter of Hammasiri (sister of king Cāṃtamūla I), and wife of king Virapurisadata. The pillar was erected with regard to the queen's mother Hammasiri, and for the sake of attaining the bliss of nirvāṇa for herself ; it also

The Dīgha-nikāya and the Majjhima-nikāya are celebrated Pāli Buddhist works. The way, however, in which the Masters of these Nikāyas are mentioned in the Nagarjunikonda inscriptions is different from that in which they are generally referred to in the Buddhist literature. It has, therefore, been conjectured by Dr. N. Dutt (Ind. Hist. Quart., VII, p. 642) that possibly the inscriptions were concerned with a Buddhist sect that was not exactly the Theravāda (the Pāli) School, but had a literature and tradition very similar to that School. Dr. Dutt further suggests that the word mātuka (Pāli mātikā, Sanskrit mātrkā) may be taken to be both the Vinaya and Abhidharma Piṭakas ; but that the specification of the number in pañca-mātuka indicates that here the Vinaya-piṭaka is meant. It must be noted that five of the principal Buddhist Schools, viz., Theravāda, Mahīśāsaka, Haimavata, Sarvāstivāda and Mahāsaṃghika had their Vinaya Piṭaka in five divisions (Przyluski, Le Concile de Rājagṛha, p. 353 ff.).

The Aparamahāvinaseliyas (Aparamahāvanaśailīyas) ² have been taken to be the same as the Aparasāilīyas whose place has been referred to by Yuan Chwang as A-fa-lo-shi-lo (Watters, On Yuan Chwang's Travels, II, p. 214). Dr. Dutt suggests (op. cit., pp. 648-49) that the Masters of the Ayira-hamgha are to be identified with the Mahāsaṃghikas and that "the whole Buddhist establishment at Nagarjunikonda belonged to the Mahāsaṃghikas." It is, however, difficult to accept the latter suggestion in view of the fact that an inscription of the site dated in the 11th year of king Ehuṇḍa Cāṃtamūla II records the dedication of a vihāra to the Masters of the Mahīśāsaka sect (Ep Ind., XX, p. 24 : imaṃ khaniyaṃ vihāro ca acariyāṇaṃ mahisāsakānaṃ supariḡahe cātudisaṃ saṃghaṃ udisāya sava-satānaṃ hita-sukhātham ṭhapitaṃ).

III. Record of the erection of a pillar in the Mahācetiya by Mahātalavarī Aḍavi-Cāṃtasiri who was the daughter of king Cāṃtamūla I, sister of king Virapurisa-data and wife of the Dhanaka chief Khamḍa-visākhamṇaka. The act is said to have been done with regard for both the houses to which she belonged and for the attainment of welfare and happiness by herself in both the worlds.

IV. Record of the erection of a stone pillar in the Mahācetiya by Mahāsenāpatinī Cula-Cāṃtisirinikā (Kṣudra-Sāntiśrī), daughter of the Kulahakas and wife of the Hiraṃṇaka (Hiraṇyaka) chief, Khamḍacalikireṃṃṇaka.

V. Record of the erection of a saila-stambha by Mahādevī Rudradhara-bhaṭṭārikā who was the daughter of the king of Ujjain and evidently the queen of Virapurisa-data, for the attainment by herself of welfare and happiness and the wealth of Nirvāṇa,—and also of the construction of a shrine and receipt of the gift of 170 dināri-māṣakas by Mahātalavarī Cāṃtisiri (sister of king Cāṃtamūla I) who belonged, by marriage, to the family of the Pūkīyas. The mention of the dināri-māṣakas (= $\frac{1}{16}$ of a dināra in weight or value ? cf. fanam),¹ in an inscription found at Nagarjunikonda in the Guntur district of the Madras Presidency, is very interesting. As already stated, it is generally held that dīnāra is the Indian designation of some Kuṣāna coins which were imitated from the Roman denarius. Again, the early Western Saka Satraps, according to many scholars, were subordinate to the great Kuṣāna kings. As, then, the Ikṣvākus appear to have been matrimonially connected with the kings of Ujjain, it is not impossible that the Kuṣāna coin-designation passed into the Ikṣvāku kingdom through the country of the Sakas.

VI. Record of the erection of a pillar by the Mahādevī Chaṭhisiri, daughter of king Cāṃtamūla's sister Haṃmasirinikā and wife of king Virapurisadata, for the purpose of attaining Nirvāna.

VII. Record of the erection of a stone-pillar by a Mahātalavarī, whose name is not mentioned, but who is said to have been the wife of the Mahāsenāpati, Mahātalavara Vāsiṣṭhīputra Mahā-Kaṃdasiri (Mahā-Skandaśrī) of the Pūkīya family and the mother of the Mahāsenāpati Mahātalavara Veṇḥusiri (Viṣṇuśrī). Vogel thinks it possible that the Vāsiṣṭhīputra Mahā-Kaṃdasiri is identical with the Pūkīya chief K[h]aṃdasiri, who is mentioned in some inscriptions as the husband of king Cāṃtamūla's sister Cāṃtisiri, mother of Khaṃda-sāgaramaṇaka. This identification makes Cāṃtisiri, mother of Khaṃdasāgaramaṇaka, a co-wife of the unknown Mahātalavarī who was the mother of Veṇḥusiri. It however seems to me that Mahā-Kaṃdasiri was a uterine elder brother of K[h]aṃdasiri. (Cf. the names Mahā-Caṃdamukha and Cula (kṣudra)-Caṃdamukha and of Mahā-Mūla and Cula-Mūla in inscription F of Nagarjunikonda).

The Nagarjunikonda inscription dated in the 14th year of king Virapurisadata is very important. It records the building of a cetiya-ghara (caitya-gr̥ha), "with a flooring of slabs, with a caitya and provided with all the necessities" in the Cula-dhammagiri-vihāra on the Śrīparvata, to the east of Vijayapurī, by a lay-member Bodhisiri (Bodhiśrī), wife of Budhimnaka and daughter of Revata of Govagāma, for the acceptance (suparigahe) of the Therīs specially of Tambapam̃ṇa (Sanskrit : Tāmraparnī or ²ṇa ; Greek : Taprobane, i.e., Ceylon) and other Therīs who are said to have "caused serenity and happiness" (pasādaka) to the people of, that is, who belonged to, Kasmira, Gaṃdhāra, Cīna, Cilāta, Tosali, Avaram̃ta, Vaṃga, Vanavāsī, Yavana (?), Damila (?), Palura (?) and Tambapam̃ṇi-dīpa. It appears that these Therīs (female ascetics) of Ceylon and other countries used to visit this region for purposes of pilgrimage.¹ Many of the countries mentioned in this connection can be easily identified.²

(i) Kāśmīra is the famous country of North-western India still known under its ancient name. The boundary of the country, however, was not the same in all ages.

(ii) The kingdom of Gaṃdhāra, according to the Rāmāyaṇa (VII, 113.11; 114.11), lay sindhora = ubhayataḥ pārśve (on both sides of the Indus). We know from the Epics and the Purāṇas that the great cities of Takṣaśilā and Puṣkalāvātī belonged to the Gaṇḍhāra kingdom. The ruins of the ancient city of Takṣaśilā are situated immediately to the east of Saraikala, a railway junction twenty miles to the north-west of Rawalpindi in the Punjab. Puṣkalāvātī (Prakrit : Pukkalaoti ; Greek : Peukelaotis) has now been correctly identified with modern Prang and Charsadda on the Swat river, seventeen miles to the north-west of Peshawar (Schoff, Periplus, pp. 183-84). The janapada of Gaṇḍhāra appears to have included the Rawalpindi district of the Punjab and the Peshawar district of the North-West Frontier Province.

(iii) and (iv) Cīna and Cilāta (Kirāta) were names of the countries inhabited by Mongoloid peoples and situated to the east and north-east of India (as regards the latter, cf. the Purāṇic statement, e.g., in Vāyu, 45, 82, purve kirātā yasy=ānte paścime yavanās=tathā). According to the Mahābhārata (V. 19.15), Bhagadatta, king of Prāgjyotiṣa or Assam, marshalled the Cīnas and Kirātas in the great battle of Kurukṣetra. The name Cīna is famous in Sanskrit literature. It originated most probably from the name of the Tsin dynasty which ruled in China from B.C. 255 to 202.¹ Cilāta is the same as Sanskrit Kirāta and Greek Kirradai (Periplus, § 62, Ptolemy, VII, 2.2), Kirradia (Ptolemy, VII. 2.16) or Tiladai (ib., VII. 2. 15). In the Milindapañho there are two passages which mention a number of places that were used to be visited by merchants for purposes of trade. In both these lists we have the mention of Cīna-Cilāta. The printed text of the Milindapañho, however, reads Cīna-vilāta ; but Sylvain Lèvi (Etudes Asiatique, II, p. 24) has rightly contended that Vilāta is an error for Cilāta. The peoples of these countries are described by the Periplus as a " race of men with flattened nose, very savage," and by Ptolemy as dwarfs with flat face and white skin.

(v) The city of Tosala or Tosālī is to be identified with modern Dhauli (Puri district, Orissa), where a set of the Fourteen Rock Edicts of Aśoka has been found. The name Dhauli appears to have sprung from Tosālī through the intermediate forms Tohali and Dhoali. In literature, the country of Tosala is always associated with (South) Kosala (modern Raipur, Bilaspur and Sambalpur districts). Some mediaeval inscriptions (Ep. Ind., IX, p. 286 ; XV, p. 2) mention Uttara-Tosala and Dakṣiṇa-Tosala. The country is to be identified with the Puri district, and parts of the adjoining districts, of Orissa.

The city is generally taken to be the same as the Tosalei metropolis which was, according to the Geography of Ptolemy, situated in trans-Gangetic India. Vogel may be right in identifying it with Dosara of Ptolemy and Dosarene of the Periplus.

(vi) Avaramta (Aparānta) is now generally identified with Northern Konkan. It had its capital at Śūrpāraka, modern Sopārā in the Thana district of the Bombay Presidency.

(vii) Vogel appears to be wrong when he says that "Vaṅga is the ancient name of Bengal." It seems to me impossible that the whole of the modern Presidency of Bengal was meant by the term Vaṅga in the third century A.D. The country of Vaṅga may be identified with Central and Eastern Bengal, along with a part of Southern Bengal (Ray Chaudhuri, Indian Antiquities, p. 184 ff.).

(viii) The country of Vanavāsī (Bom. Gaz., I, ii, p. 278, n. 2) appears to be the same as modern (North) Kanara. The capital is to be identified with the modern town of Banavāsī in the North Kanara district of the Bombay Presidency. Vogel seems to be wrong in identifying it with "Banavāsī, a village or small town in the Shimoga district of the Mysore state" (Ep. Ind., XX, p. 8).

(ix) The exact situation of the Yavana country (that is, the country inhabited by the Yavanas or Yaunas, the Greeks) is not yet known. It is not certain whether Yavana means here the ancient dominions of the Greek emperors of Syria, or the land of the Yonas referred to in the third Rock Edict of Aśoka, or the Far Eastern Yavana country (Northern Annam), or any settlement of the Græco-Romans somewhere in South India.¹ According to the Mahābhārata (XII. 207. 43), we know, the country of the Yaunas lay in the Uttarāpatha. The city of Alasanda, mentioned in the Mahāvamśa, has been identified by Geiger with Alexandria founded by Alexander the Great near Kabul (Geiger, Mahāvamśa, p. 194). According to the Milindapañho, the Indo-Greek king Menander (Milinda) was born at Kalasigāma in the dipa of Alasanda or Alexandria (Trenckner, Milindapañho, pp. 82-83). The capital where Menander ruled was at Sākala, modern Sialkot in the Punjab. The Indian Yavana country may possibly be the same as Alasanda of the Indian literature, which appears to have been somewhere about modern N.W.F.P. and Afghanistan.

(x) and (xi) The reading of the names Damila and Palura is not quite certain. Damila, however, can be no other than the country of the Tamil people. Palura, if the reading be accepted, may be identified with Ptolemy's Paloura (Geography, VII. i, § 16), which has been taken to be the Dravidian form of the name of the famous city, Dantapura, the ancient capital of Kaliṅga. Cf. Pal (tooth) + ūr (city) = Danta (tooth) + pura (city). But we cannot be definite on this point. First because the reading is doubtful; secondly, the connection of the name with Dantapura is conjectural ; and thirdly, Dantapura is known to have been a city, while all the names in our list appear to designate countries or provinces. The site of Dantapura has not been definitely identified. We have reference to the Dantapuravāsaka in the Purle plates of the Ganga king Indravarmān (6th century A.D.), edited in Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 361, where it has been suggested that the name survives in that of the fort of Dantavaktra near Chicacole in the Ganjam district of the Madras Presidency. The Jirjingi copper-plate grant of Indravarman was also issued from Dantapura. Oldham identifies Paloura with a village called Pālūru about six miles north-east of Ganjam (J. B. O. R. S., XXII, p. 1 ff.).

Srīparvata (=Nagarjunikonda, according to many), where the Cula-dharmagiri-vihāra was built, does not appear to be the same as the Śrīśaila in the Kurnool district of the Madras Presidency. Vijayapurī (the Ikṣvāku capital, according to some) which was situated to the west of Srīparvata was possibly the city “once situated in the valley of Nāgārjunikonda.”¹

The same upāsikā Bodhisiri here claims also the construction of a chaitya-shrine at the Kulaha-vihāra, a shrine for the Bodhi-tree at the Sīhala-vihāra, one cell at the Great Dharmagiri, a maṇḍapa-pillar at the Mahāvihāra, a hall for religious practices at Devagiri, a tank, a veranda and a maṇḍapa at Puvaseḷa, a stone-maṇḍapa at the eastern gate of the great Caitya at Kaṇṭakasola or °seḷa, three cells at Hirumuṭhuva, seven cells at Papilā, and a stone-maṇḍapa at Puphagiri.

The localities mentioned in this connection cannot all be satisfactorily identified. The name of the Kulaha-vihāra reminds us of the Kulahaka family which, as we have suggested above, was probably matrimonially connected with the Ikṣvākus. The Sīhala (Sinhala, i.e., Ceylon)-vihāra appears to have been a convent “founded either by a Sinhalese, or more probably, for the accommodation of Sinhalese monks.” This Sihala-vihāra contained a shrine for the Bodhi-tree (Bodhivṛkṣa-prāsāda). It is interesting to note that the Bodhi-tree is a necessary adjunct of the Ceylonese vihāras even at the present time. Puvaseḷa (Pūrvaśaila) is mentioned by Yuan Chwang as Fu-p’o-shi-lo, where resided a Buddhist sect known as the Pūrvaśailīyas. The Pūrvaśailīya ācāryas have been referred to in a fragmentary pillar inscription discovered at Alluru in the Nandigram taluka of the Kistna district. Kaṇṭakasela has been rightly taken to be the same as the emporium Kaṇṭakassula mentioned by Ptolemy (Geography, VII, i, 15) immediately after the river Maisōlos (the Krishna) in the land called Maisōlia (Masulipatam). Kaṇṭakassula has been identified with the town of Ghaṇṭaśālā which lies between the village of Guduru and the mouth of the Krishna (cf. Ptolemy’s location : Mouth of the river Maisōlos.....

.....Kaṇṭakassula, a mart.....Koddoura (loc. cit.).¹ Mr. Rea discovered (South Indian Antiquities, p. 132) at this place the remains of a stūpa which, he thought, date from the beginning of the Christian era. The remains almost certainly belong to the Great Caitya mentioned in these inscriptions. Pūphagiri is probably the same as Puṣpagiri in the Cuddapah district (An. Rep. S. Ind. Ep., 1926-27, p. 73).

The Nagārjunikonda inscription, dated in the 18th year of king Virapurisadata, records the building of “ a stone-hall, surrounded by a cloister and provided with every necessary at the foot of the Mahācetiya ” for the acceptance of the Aparamahāvinaseliyas, by the Mahātalavarī Cāmtisiri, sister of king Cāmtamula I, wife of the Pūkiya chief Vāsiṣṭhīputra Khamdasiri and mother of Khamdasāgaramnaka, desiring the longevity, strength and victory of her own son-in-law (apano jāmātuka), king Māṭharīputra Virapurisadata, and for the attainment of hita and sukha in both the worlds by herself. As we have said above, it is to be noted that an inscription of the 6th year of king Virapurisadata calls Cāmtisiri the king's pituchā (father's sister); here, however, the king is represented as the son-in-law of the lady. Vogel therefore thinks that Virapurisadata married his cousin, a daughter of his aunt Cāmtisiri, between the 6th and 18th years of his reign.

A carved pillar was erected in the 20th year of Virapurisadata's reign in memory of his dead (saga-gata) father by the latter's sisters, mothers and consorts. Some figures in the reliefs carved on the pillars have been taken to represent king Cāmtamūla I (Ep. Ind., XXI, pp. 63-64).

The Jaggayyapetta inscriptions are dated in the 20th year of king Virapurisadata. The royal genealogy is not given in these inscriptions. They record the erection of five āyaka-thambhas (entrance-pillars) at the eastern gate of the Mahācetiya of Lord Buddha, by the manufacturer (avesanī) Sudatha (Siddhārtha) resident of the village of Mahā-Kāḍurūra and son of the manufacturer Nakacada (Nāgacandra) of Nadatūra in the Kamaka-raṭha. Kamaka-raṭha seems to be the same as the Karmarāṣṭra of later inscriptions. As for the suffix -ka, we may notice the passages ujanikā-mahārā(ja)-bālikā and vanavāsaka-mahārāja, etc., of the Nagarjunikonda inscriptions. Karmarāṣṭra has been identified with the northern part of Nellore and southern part of Guntur district.

EHUVULA CĀṂTAMŪLA II.

King Māṭharīputra Virapurisadata was succeeded by his son Ehuṇvula Cāṁtamūla, born of queen Vāsiṣṭhī Bhaṭidevā. It is interesting to note that the custom of naming a grandson after his grandfather was prevalent among the Southern Ikṣvākus, as it was in many other ruling dynasties of ancient India. It has been noticed by Dr. Hirananda Sastri (Ep. Ind., XX, p. 6, n. 2) that this custom is sanctioned by Patañjali's Mahābhāṣya (I. i. 1) where we have tripuruṣānukaṁ nāmakṛtaṁ kuryāt ; Kaiyaṭa on this passage has pitā tasya ye trayah puruṣās = tān = anukāyaty = abhidhatte.

Several inscriptions of king Vāsiṣṭhīputra Ehuṇvula Cāṁtamūla II have been discovered, some at Nagarjunikonda and one at an adjacent place called Kottampalugu. The Nagarjunikonda inscriptions, dated in the 2nd regnal year of the king, record the establishment of a vihāra by the Mahādevī Bhaṭidevā, daughter-in-law of king Vāsiṣṭhīputra Cāṁtamūla I, wife of king Māṭharīputra Virapurisadata and mother of king Vāsiṣṭhīputra Ehuṇvula Cāṁtamūla II, for the ācāryas of the Bahusutīya sect. The Bahusutīyas were a branch of the Mahāsaṃghikas.

The Kottampalugu inscription, dated in the 11th regnal year of king Ehuṇvula Cāṁtamūla II, records the construction of a vihāra by Kodabalisiri, Mahādevī of the Mahārāja of Vanavāsaka, granddaughter of king Cāṁtamūla I, daughter of king Virapurisadata and sister of king Ehuṇḍa Cāṇḍamūla II, for the acceptance of the ācāryas of the Mahīśāsaka sect. The Ikṣvāku princess Kodabalisiri, as we have noticed above, was possibly the queen of a Cuṭu-Śātakarṇi king of Banavāsī. The Buddhist sect of the Mahīśāsakas is mentioned also in other early inscriptions.

A saṃghārāma is known to have been built for the Mahīśāsaka ācāryas somewhere in the Punjab, when the Hūṇa king Toramāna was ruling (Ep. Ind., I, p. 239).

IMPORTANCE OF THE IKṢVĀKU PERIOD.

The Ikṣvāku inscriptions discovered at Jaggayyapetta in the Kistna district and Nagarjunikonda in the Guntur district are of great importance for the history of Buddhism.

Dr. Dutt thinks (Ind. Hist. Quart., V, p. 794) that the site of Nagarjunikonda was a famous resort of Buddhism in the early years of the Christian era and, probably, also an early centre of Mahāyāna. "Just as Bodh-Gayā grew up on the bank of the Nerañjarā as a very early centre of Hīnayāna and a place of pilgrimage for the early Buddhists, so also did Amarāvati (extending to Jaggayyapetta) and Nagarjunikonda on the bank of the Kṛṣṇā (including the tributary Palar) as a flourishing centre of proto-Mahāyāna in the pre-Christian and the early Christian era and a place of pilgrimage for the later Buddhists." The construction of the Amarāvati stūpa, with its enlargements, decorations and railings, is placed between circa 2nd century B.C. and 2nd century A.D. (Burgess, Arch. Surv. South Ind., pp. 122-23), while that of the stūpas of Jaggayyapetta and Nagarjunikonda has been placed in or before the 3rd or 4th century A.D. (Ep. Ind., XX, p. 2; Ind. Hist. Quart., VII, p. 634).

The stūpas of Amarāvati appear to have been built at the time of Sātavāhana suzerainty. That the later Sātavāhanas, who were possibly Brahmanist in faith, showed great favour towards the Buddhists is known to all readers of the Sātavāhana inscriptions. They appear to have had strong Buddhist leaning, if some of them were not actually Buddhist themselves. The successors of the later Sātavāhanas, the early Ikṣvākus, were however staunch followers of the Brahmanical faith. Vāsiṣṭhīputra Cāntamūla I, as we have seen, has been credited with the performance of the agnihotra, agniṣṭoma, vājapeya and āśvamedha sacrifices. Evidently Buddhism suffered during the reign of this king.

With the accession of Māṭharīputra Virapurisadata on the Ikṣvāku throne, a new era began with the Buddhists of the Kistna-Guntur region. The great stūpas of Jaggayyapetta and Nagarjunikonda were built, repaired or extended, and Buddhist Therīs were coming for pilgrimage from all the Buddhist countries of the world to this centre of Buddhism. The mention of Sīhala-vihāra and of the dedication of a cetiyaḡhara specially to the Therīs of Ceylon points to the good relation that must have existed between the Buddhist communities of the Ikṣvāku country and their co-religionists of the Island of Ceylon. Thus we see, Buddhism was in its heyday at the time of the later Ikṣvākus.

The existence of such relations among the Buddhist communities of the different countries can be accounted for from the sea-trade which was carried on between the ports of Ceylon and other countries on the one hand and those situated on the mouths of the Krishna and the Godavari on the other. Kaṇṭakasela, the great emporium on the bank of the Krishna, appears to have played a large part in this international trade. Dr. Vogel seems to be right in thinking that this trade was largely responsible for the flourishing state of Buddhism in this part of India (Ep. Ind., XX, p. 10).

The collapse of Buddhism in the lower Krishna valley appears to have begun with the decline of the Ikṣvāku power. As a cause of this collapse, Vogel refers to the "rising of the powerful dynasties devoted to Brahmanism like the Pallava in the South and the Chālukya in the west." It must however also be added that the immediate successors of the Ikṣvākus in the rule of Andhradeśa were all staunch Brahmanist. After the decline of the Ikṣvākus, we know, the Kistna-Guntur region passed to the Bṛhatphalāyanas and the Pallavas. Both of these dynasties were Brahmanical Hindu, and the latter claimed to have performed the aśvamedha sacrifice which is evidently a sign of aggressive Hinduism. Bṛhatphalāyana Jayavarman, as we shall see, was a devotee of Lord Maheśvara. The Pallava king Śivaskandavarman is known to have performed not only the Brahmanical sacrifices, Aśvamedha and Agniṣṭoma, but also the Vājapeya (Ep. Ind., I, p. 2). The significant boast of the early Pallava princes of having been Dharma-mahārāja and Kaliyuga-doṣ-āvasanna-dharmm-od-dharaṇa-nitya-sannaddha undoubtedly refers to the fact that they were determined to purify their Brahmanical faith from the influence of heretical doctrines like Buddhism. Not a single king of the Śālaṅkāyana and Viṣṇukūṇḍin lines is as yet known to have Buddhist leaning. On the contrary, we have a Śālaṅkāyana king who performed one Aśvamedha sacrifice and a Viṣṇukūṇḍin king who performed no less than eleven Aśvamedhas and thousand Agniṣṭomas. The decline of Buddhism in the Andhra country is also evidenced by the account of the celebrated Chinese pilgrim Yuan Chwang who visited An-to-lo (Andhra) and To-na-kie-tse-kia (Dhānyakaṭaka) or Ta-An-to-lo (Mahāndhra) in 639 A.D. and resided at the capital of the latter for "many months" (see An. Rep. S. Ind. Ep., 1913-14, p. 38). Nevertheless Buddhism did not die away all at once. The Buddhist faith of an Ānanda king of Guntur, who appears to have ruled about the end of the 4th century or the beginning of the 5th, clearly shows that Buddhism lingered in the Andhra country, although the glory it enjoyed at the time of the later Sātavāhanas and the Ikṣvākus was long a thing of the past. Later traces of Buddhism in the Amarāvātī region are found in the Amaravati pillar inscription (S. Ind. Ins., I, pp. 26-27) of the Pallava chief Sīṃhavarman (c. A. D. 1100), probably a vassal of Kulottuṅga Cola I (Sewell, List, p. 90), and another Amaravati pillar inscription of Koṭa Keta II, from which we know that “ Buddhist worship at the old stūpa was still maintained and Keta II gave grants in its support ” (Ep. Ind., VI, p. 146 ; Sewell, op. cit , s. v. A.D. 1182). Another inscription records the grant of a lamp to the Buddhist stūpa of Amarāvātī, made by Bayyalā, daughter of the Nātavāḍi chief Rudra. This also shows that Buddhist worship was maintained in the Andhra country as late as A.D. 1234 (Sewell, op. cit., p. 141).

CHAPTER II.

THE BRĤATPHALĀYANAS.

JAYAVAMMA (= JAYAVARMAN).

A copper-plate grant of a rājā (mahārāja, according to the legend of the seal attached to the plates) named Jayavamma, who belonged to the Br̥hatphalāyana gotra, was discovered at Kondamudi in the Tenali taluka of the Kistna district (Ep. Ind., VI, p. 315).¹ No other king of this family is as yet known from inscriptions or other sources.

As regards the date of king Jayavarman, Hultsch says (loc. cit): "The alphabet of his inscription shows that he must have lived in the same period as the Pallava king Sivaskandavarman who issued the Mayidavolu plates. Further, the language and phraseology of the inscription are so similar to the Nasik inscriptions of Gautamīputra Sātakarṇi (Nos. 4 and 5) and Vāsiṣṭhīputra Pulumāyi (No. 3) that Jayavarman's date cannot have been very distant from that of those two Andhra kings. The archaic Sanskrit alphabet of the seal of the new plates is corroborative evidence in the same direction." King Jayavarman Br̥hatphalāyana may be placed about the closing years of the third and the beginning of the fourth century A. D.

The grant was issued in the 10th year of Jayavarman's reign from the viṣaya-skandhāvāra (victorious camp) of Kudūra (modern Guduru, 4 miles north-west of Masulipatam) which seems to be the same as Koddoura, mentioned in the Geography of Ptolemy (VII, i, 15) as a place in Maisōlia (Masulipatam).¹

The Kondamudi plates record an order of king Jayavarman, who has been described as mahessara-pāda-parigahita and was, therefore, evidently a devotee of Śiva (Maheśvara), to the vāpata (vyāpṛta) at Kudūra to execute the grant of a Brahmadeya (religious gift to Brāhmaṇas) made by the king. Vyāpṛta, according to Hemachandra, is the same as niyogin, āyukta and karmasaciva (cf. niyogī karmasaciva āyukto vyāpṛtś = ca saḥ). A vyāpṛta was therefore an executive officer. The Brahmadeya was made of the village of Pāṃtura (Panduru in the Bandar or Masulipatam taluka according to Dubreuil) in Kudūrahāra, i.e., the āhāra or district of Kudūra (cf. Sātavāhani-hāra in the Myakadoni inscription of Pulumāvi, Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 154). It is therefore apparent that the vyāpṛta was in charge of the Kudūra district and held his office at the chief town of the same name.

Scholars think that Kudūralāia of the Kondamudi grant is the same as the Kudrāhāra-viṣaya of the Śālaṅkāyana inscriptions and Gudrāhāra, Gudrāvāra and Gudrāra of later inscriptions. The identification may not be impossible. It is, in that case, necessary to think that Kudūrahāra which originally meant "the āhāra of Kudūra" gradually came to be used as a place-name itself; because Kudrāhāra (not Kudūra) was the name of the viṣaya (province) at the time of the Śālaṅkāyanas.² According to Dubreuil this province comprised roughly the present Bandar (Masulipatam) taluka. This region, occupied once by the Br̥hatphalāyanas, was, as we shall see later on, in the possession of the Śālan-kāyanas of Veṅgī in the 5th century A. D.

The recipients of the Brahmadeya were the following Brahmans :—Gotama-gota-jāyāpara¹ Savagataja (Sarvaguptārya), Savigīja of the Tānava (Tānavya) gotra ; Goginaja and Bhavaṃnaja of the Koḍina (Kaunḍinya) gotra ; Rudavṇhuja (Rudraviṣṇvārya) of the Bhāradāya (Bhāradvāja) gotra, Rudaghosaja (Rudraghoṣārya) of the Opamaṃnava (Aupamanyava gotra) ; Īsaradataja (Īśvaradattārya) of the Kāṃṇhāyana (Kārṣṇāyana) gotra ; and Khamdarudaja (Skandarudrārya) of the Kosika (Kauśika) gotra. The affix - aja (= ārya) added to the names of these Brāhmaṇas survives even to the present time in Madras names like Veṅkayya (Veṅkārya), Rāmayya (Rāmārya), etc., and in the surname Ayyar (= Ārya).

The parihāras (immunities) granted are interesting to note. They are apāvesa, anomasa, aloṇakhādaka, araṭha-savinayika, etc. Apāvesa is evidently the same as abhaṭapra-veśa (exemption from the entrance of an army) of other South Indian inscriptions. Military authorities generally called upon the villagers to meet their demands ; this fact is proved by a record of Mahāsāmantādhipati Śāntivarman of Banavāsī. Good governments therefore tried to minimise the exactions of the soldiers by preventing them from entering the villages. Śukra (V. 84) says that soldiers should encamp outside a village and should not enter villages except on official business. Anomasa has been taken to mean “ exemption from being meddled with.” The third parihāra, viz., aloṇakhādaka, made the village free from being dug for salt. The salt-mines of the country, were evidently property of the king. The term arathasavinayika has been translated by Senart as "not to be interfered by the District Police."¹

The grant was executed by the mahātagivara, mahādaṇḍanāyaka (field-marshal?) Bhāpabānavamīna. Mahātagivara,

"The next term seems to be written in our inscriptions arathasavinayika or asavinayika; but line 13 of the grant of Śivaskandavarman (Ep. Ind., Vol. I, p. 6) distinctly reads arathasavinayikam. In stating that this spelling excluded his earlier explanation, Bühler did not suggest another instead of it. I do not know any parallel expression which clears up this one finally. The word seems to represent arāṣṭrasavinayika, but etymology alone is an unsafe guide in the interpretation of technical terms. Vineti is only used in a moral sense. Could we think of translating 'exempted from the police, the magistrate of the district (rāṣṭra, compare Dr. Fleet's Gupta Inscriptions, p. 92, note), or of the rāṣṭrīn'? This would remind us of those grants in which, on the other hand, it is stated that the right of punishing thefts and offences is reserved by the king, or of those in which the right to punish the 'ten offences' (sadaśāparadha; see, e.g., the Alina plates, l. 67 in Dr. Fleet's Gupta Inscriptions, p. 179, and the Deo-Baranār inscription, l. 17; ibid., p. 217) is transferred to the donee. At least I have nothing more plausible to suggest. It is well known that the different formulas of immunities were variable and always incomplete. And it is not to be wondered at that they should be summed up in a comprehensive and general expression like sarajātāpārīhārika. Elsewhere the texts are more precise in stating that there are eighteen kinds of immunities. It will be enough to quote the inscriptions of the Pallavas, and notably that of Śivaskandavarman, which reads aṭṭhārasajātāparihāra (Ep. Ind., Vol. I, p. 6)."

according to Vogel, is a mistake for Mahātalaṭara which occurs so many times in the inscriptions of the Ikṣvākus (see above). Possibly it was the custom for an official to write down the oral order of the king (aviyena ānataṃ). The grant is said to have been signed by the king himself (sayam chalo).

The seal attached to the Kondamudi plates has, in the centre, a trident in relief (the handle of which seems to end in an arrow), a bow (?), the crescent of the moon and an indistinct symbol of roughly triangular shape. Round the margin of the seal runs a Sanskrit legend in archaic characters which differ totally from those employed on the plates (Ep. Ind., VI, p. 315). This difference is possibly due to the fact that the seals were kept ready in the king's record office and were attached to the plates when the latter were prepared. Hultszch appears to suggest that the seal is much older than the plates. The Sanskrit legend however seems to show that the seal cannot be placed much earlier than 300 A.D.

CAPITAL OF THE BṚHATPHALĀYANAS.¹

The only copper-plate grant of the Bṛhatphalāyana dynasty, belonging to king Jayavaṃṣa (= Jayavarman) Bṛhatphalāyana, was discovered, as we have already seen, at Kondamudi a place in the Tenali taluka of the Kistna district (Ep. Ind., VI., p. 315). We have also seen that the grant was issued in the 10th regnal year of Jayavaṃṣa from viṣaya-khaṃdhāvārā nagarā Kudūrāto, i.e. from the viṣaya-khaṃdhāvāra at the city of Kudūra. It is for this reason that scholars have taken Kudūra (modern Guduru near Masulipatam) to be the capital where the Bṛhatphalāyanas ruled. Prof. Dubreuil, as for instance, writes : "The Kondamudi plates (Ep. Ind., Vol. VI, p. 315) are dated in the 10th year of king Jayavarman of the Bṛhatphalāyanas, who reigned at Kudūra ;" and again : "the town of Kudūra, which was the capital of Jayavarman in the III century of the Christian era, is but the modern village of Guduru which is 4 miles west-north-west of Masulipatam and 6 miles from Ghanaśālā....." (Anc. Hist. Dec., pp. 84-85). The Professor has rightly identified the place with Koddoura in the country of Maisôlia (Masulipatam), mentioned in the Geography of Ptolemy.

It is, however, interesting to note that Koddoura 136° 11' 20" has been mentioned not as a metropolis, but as an ordinary place in Maisôlia (Geog., VII, i, 15) by Ptolemy who is believed to have written his Geography about the middle of the 2nd century A.D. The archaic characters used on the seal of the Kondamudi grant and its phraseological connection with the grants of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi and Vāsisthīputra Pulumāvi, as well as its language and script, assign the grant to about 300 A.D. Should we then believe that the Br̥hatphalāyanas became a ruling power just after the decline of the Śātavāhanas in the early years of the 3rd century A.D. and established themselves at Kudūra (Koddoura) from where they issued charters as early as the end of the third or the beginning of the 4th century ? It is, however, far more natural to think that they were originally a local ruling power under the suzerainty of the Śātavāhanas and gradually rose to prominence during and after the latter's decline.

The city of Kudūra has been called a vijaya-skandhāvāra in the Kondamudi grant. The word skandhāvāra generally means, "a camp ;" but according to the lexicographer Hemacandra it may also signify "a metropolis." While on expedition, oriental kings are known to have held court in camps ¹ The use of the term skandhāvāra in the sense of a metropolis is most probably due to such a practice. Skandhāvāra (as sometimes also possibly the term vāsaka) appears to mean a temporary residence, and therefore a temporary capital, of a king.² It is, therefore, ¹ For the court of the Mughals, see General History of the Mogol Empire (extracted from Memoirs of M. Manouchi) by F. F. Catrou (Baṅgabāsī Edn), p. 335ff. "As Visapur was at the time of writing these Memoirs the theatre of war against the Sevagi, Oranzeb removed his court and armies thither."—p. 343. Cf also "During these years (i.e., the years of Asiatic campaign) Alexander's camp was his court and capital, the political centre of his empire—a vast city rolling along over mountain and river through Central Asia."—J. B. Bury, History of Greece for Beginners, 1915, p. 422.

² It is interesting in this connection to refer to Yuan Chwang's account of the capital of Mahārāṣṭra (Mo-ho-la-ch'a) under Pulakeśin II (Pu-lo-ki-she) of the Western Calukya dynasty (Beal, Bud. Records of the Western World, II, p. 235; also his Life of Huen Tsang, p. 146). From the inscriptions of the Calukyas and their inveterate enemy, the Pallavas, there can be no doubt that the capital of Pulakeśin II was at Vātāpi, modern Bādāmi in the Bijapur district of the Bombay Presidency. Now, very doubtful whether the viṣaya skandhāvāra of king Jayavarman Br̥hatphalāyana could be the permanent capital of the Br̥hatphalāyanas.

The town of Kudūra, which was the political centre of Kudūrahāra, i.e., the Kudūra district, has been identified, as we have already seen, with a village in the Bandar or Masulipatam taluka. The find of the plates at Kondamudi appears to prove that this region was a part of the Br̥hatphalāyana kingdom in about 300 A.D. The capital of the Br̥hatphalāyanas seems therefore not to have been very far from the Masulipatam region.

In this connection it is very interesting to note that Ptolemy makes mention of the metropolis of Pitundra (135° 12') in the country of the people called Maisōloi (Geog., VII. i, § 93). In op cit., § 79, the Maisōloi are placed near the country of the Salakēnoi (Śālaṅkāyanas of Veṅgi) and in § 15 their country has been called Maisōlia (Masulipatam). Their metropolis, Pitundra, has been identified by Sylvain Lèvi with Pihunda of the Uttarādhyāyana and Pithumḍa of the Hathigumpha inscription of king Khāravela (Ind. Ant., 1926, p. 145). We have seen that the Br̥hatphalāyanas ruled over the Masulipatam region, which is to be identified with Maisōlia of Ptolemy. Pitundra the capital of Maisōlia in the time of Ptolemy (middle of the 2nd century) appears therefore almost certainly to have been the capital of the family of Jayavarman Br̥hatpha-the surroundings of Bādāmi, as scholars have noticed, do not answer to the description given by the Chinese pilgrim, and its distance from Broach (435 miles) is altogether incommensurate with the distance of 1000 li (about 167 miles) as specified by Yuan Chwang. Scholars therefore now generally agree with the view of Fleet that the town in question is Nasik, about 128 miles to the south-east of Broach. Fleet seems to be right when he suggests: "We have therefore to look for some subordinate but important town, far to the north of Bādāmi, which was mistakenly spoken of as the capital by Hsuen Tsiang; most probably because it was the basis of the operations against Harshavardhana of Kanauj, and because in connection with these operations, Pulikeśi II happened to be there at the time" (Bomb. Gaz., I, Pt. II, p. 355).

lāyana, ruler of the Masulipatam region in the end of the 3rd or the beginning of the 4th century.

If we now accept the reading Pithumḍa in a passage of the Hathigumpha inscription (line 11) of Khāravela and the interpretation that king Khāravela of Kalīṅga besieged the city of Pithumḍa, it is not impossible to think that the Br̥hatphalāyanas were ruling at Pithunda = Pitundra as early as the time of Khāravela (2nd or 1st century B.C.).

CHAPTER III.

THE ANANDAS.

HIRAṆYAGARBHA.¹

As the word Hiranyagarbha has some bearing on the question of the genealogy of kings whom we call the Ānandas, we shall deal with this term first.

According to Sanskrit Lexicons, the word Hiranyagarbha has two principal meanings. First, it is a well-known epithet of Lord Brahman ; secondly, it is the name of one of the ṣoḍaśa-mahādāna, i.e., the sixteen Great Gifts which are enumerated and explained in books like the Matsya-Purāṇa, Hemādri's Vratakhanda and Ballālasena's Dānśāgara. The sixteen Mahādānas are dāna (offering) of the following things :—

- | | |
|---------------------|---------------------|
| 1. Tulāpuruṣa | 9. Dharā |
| 2. Hiranyagarbha | 10. Hiranyāśvaratha |
| 3. Brahmāṇḍa | 11. Hemahastiratha |
| 4. Kalpapādapa | 12. Viṣṇucakra |
| 5. Gosahasra | 13. Kalpalatā |
| 6. Hiranyakāmadhenu | 14. Saptasāgara |
| 7. Hiranyāśva | 15. Ratnadhenu |
| 8. Pañcalāngala | 16. Mahābhūtaghaṭa |

These names are more or less of a technical character. They have been explained in full details in the Mahādānāvarta section of the Dānasāgara, Chapter V of the Vratākhaṇḍa and Chapter 247 ff. of the Matsya-Purāṇa.

The word Hiraṇyagarbha occurs several times in the inscriptions of some South Indian kings. In the Gorantla inscription (Ind. Ant., IX, p. 102 f.), king Attivarman is called aprameya-hiraṇyagarbha-prasava, which phrase was translated by Fleet, the editor of the Gorantla inscription, as “who is the posterity of the inscrutable (god) Hiraṇyagarbha,” i.e., Brahman. In the Mahakuta pillar inscription of the Calukya king Maṅgaleśa (ibid, XIX, p. 9 ff.) we have the passage hiraṇyagarbha-sambhūta. Here also Fleet who edited the inscription translated the phrase as “who was descended from (the god) Hiraṇyagarbha (Brahman).” It must be noticed that only particular kings have been connected with Hiraṇyagarbha in the inscriptions of their respective families. If Fleet’s interpretation is correct we should have found other kings of the family—wherein one king has been called Hiraṇyagarbha-sambhūta—with titles of the same signification. Moreover, when we notice that in the Mahakuta pillar inscription, this epithet is given only to Pulakeśin I, and not to Jayasimha the first king mentioned, nor to Maṅgaleśa the reigning monarch, there remains no doubt that Fleet’s theory is unjustifiable. I therefore hold with Hultsch that the word Hiraṇyagarbha, in these inscriptions, signifies the second of the sixteen Mahādānas or Great Gifts.

While editing the Mattepad plates of Dāmodarvarman (Ep. Ind., XVII, p. 328ff.), Hultsch remarked: “A similar feat is ascribed to king Attivarman in another copper-plate grant from the Guntur district, where I translate the epithet aprameya-Hiraṇyagarbha-prasavena by ‘who is a producer of (i.e., who has performed) innumerable Hiraṇyagarbhas.’” Hultsch, here, evidently takes the passage hiraṇyagarbha-prasava as a case of the Ṣaṣṭhi-tatpuruṣa compound to mean “prasava (origin, producer) of the Hiranyagarbha.” But he was in difficulty with the word Hiranyagarbha-prasūta which occurs in the Ipur grant (No. 1) of the Viṣṇukunḍin king Mādhavavarman I (ibid, p. 335 f.). As prasūta is an adjective, it cannot make a case of the Śaṣṭhī-tatpuruṣa compound. Hultzsch, therefore, had to correct the passage as Hiranyagarbha-prasūti, i.e., prasūti (origin, producer) of the Hiranyagarbha (ibid, p. 336, note 7). But when we notice that the epithet Hiranyagarbha-prasūta also occurs in the Polamuru plates of the same Viṣṇukunḍin king (Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., VI, p. 17 ff.), and further that the Mahakuta pillar inscription has Hiranyagarbha-sambhūta, there can be no doubt that Hultzsch is wrong in taking the passage Hiranyagarbha-prasava as a case of the Śaṣṭhī-tatpuruṣa compound. The words Hiranyagarbha-prasūta and Hiranyagarbha-sambhūta are certainly examples of the Pañcamī-tatpuruṣa compound and mean “born of the Hiranyagarbha.” The word Hiranyagarbha-prasava must also mean the same thing. I therefore take it as a case of the Bahuvrīhi compound to mean “one whose prasava (origin, producer, progenitor) is the Hiranyagarbha.” But how can a king be born of the Hiranyagarbha which we have taken to signify the second of the sixteen Mahādānas?

In the performance of the Hiranyagarbha-mahādāna ceremony, the thing to be given away to the Brahmanas is a Hiranyagarbha, literally, “a golden womb.” Hiranyagarbha here signifies a golden kunḍa, three cubits in height. Cf.

brāhmaṇair = ānayet kunḍam tapanīya-mayaṁ śubham dvāsaptaty-angul-occhrāyam hema-pankaja-garbhavat.

To discuss in details all the functions of the ceremony is not necessary for our purpose. The quotations, which are all from the 249th Chapter of the Matsya-Purāna, will sufficiently clear the point.

After due arcanā, the performer of the Mahādāna ceremony is to utter a mantra in adoration to Lord Hiraṇyagarbha (here, Lord Viṣṇu), two lines of which run :

bhūr-loka-pramukhā lokās = tava garbhe vyavasthitāḥ bram-ādayas = tathā devā namas = te viśva-dhāriṇe.

Thereafter the performer enters into the hiraṇyagarbha, i.e., the golden kuṇḍa, and the priests perform the ceremonies of garbhādhāna, pūṃsavana and sīmantonayana of the “golden womb,” as they would do in the case of an ordinary pregnant woman. Cf.

evam = āmantrīya tan-madhyam = āvisy = āmbha udañmukhaḥ
muṣṭibhyāṃ parisamgrhya dharmarāja-caturmukau jānumadhye śiraḥ kṛtvā tiṣṭheta śvāsa-pañcakam garbhādhānam pūṃsavanam sīmantonayam tathā kuryur = hiraṇya-garbhasya tatas = te dvija-puṅgavāḥ.

Then the performer is taken out of the “golden womb,” and the jāta-karma and other necessary functions are performed by the priests, as if the performer is a newly born child. After that, the performer is to utter another mantra, wherein occur the following significant lines :

mātr = āham janitāḥ pūrvam martya-dharmā sur-ottama tvad-garbha-sambhavād = eṣa divya-deho bhavamy = aham.

“O the best of gods, previously I was given birth to by my mother (and) was martya-dharmā (one having the qualities of an earthly creature). (But) now owing to my (re-) birth from your womb, I become divya-deha (one having celestial body).”

That the performer of the Hiranyagarbha-mahādāna was thought to be “born of the Hiranyagarbha, i.e., golden womb,” is also clear from the next mantra to be uttered by the priests :

adya-jātasya te = 'ṅgāni abhiṣekṣyāmahe vayam.

After the ceremony is over, the priests receive the gift of that golden womb together with many other things.

II

GENEALOGY OF THE ĀNANDA KINGS.¹

Two kings of the Ānanda family are known from their inscriptions. They are Attivarman of the Gorantla plates (Ind. Ant., IX, p. 102 f.) and Dāmodarvarman of the Mattepad plates (Ep. Ind., XVII. p. 327 f.). We have already dealt with the reference to the word Hiraṇyagarbha in the Gorantla inscription and with its different interpretations. Hultzsch rightly says: "When editing the Gorantla plates of Attivarman, my late lamented friend Fleet believed this king (scil. Attivarman) to have been a Pallava—chiefly because he interpreted the epithet aprameya-Hiraṇyagarbha-prasavena by 'who is the posterity of the inscrutable (god) Hiraṇyagarbha.' As I have shown above, the rendering is inadmissible in the light of the corresponding epithet used in the fresh plates, and Fleet himself had since withdrawn his original opinion in his Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts, second edition,² p. 334 " (Ep. Ind., XVII. 328). In the Gorantla inscription, Attivarman has been called kandaranṛpati-kula-samudbhūta, "sprung from the family of king Kandara " ; the family (kula), in its turn, is called ānanda-maharṣi-vamśa-samudbhūta, "sprung from the lineage of the great sage Ānanda''. On the other hand, the Mattepad plates were issued from vijaya-Kandara-pura, "victorious city (founded by) king Kandara." Dāmodaravarman is, here, said to have belonged to the Ānandagotra. Both the Gorantla and Mattepad grants were discovered in the Guntur district of the Madras Presidency. While editing the Mattepad plates, Hultzsch, on these grounds, suggested that the three kings Kandara,¹ Attivarman and Dāmodaravarman belonged to the same family and that they may be styled "the Ānanda kings of Guntur."

² " And now that we know more about the early history and Purāṇic genealogy of the Pallavas, it is difficult to adapt these details to their accounts, though Attivarman does, like the Pallavas, claim to belong to the posterity of the god Hiraṇyagarbha, i.e., Brahman. On the other hand, the name Kandhara,—and doubtless Kandara also,—is a variant of Kṛishṇa; and this suggests that we may possibly have here an early Rāshṭrakūṭa record " (Fleet's Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts in Bomb. Gaz., I, Part II, p. 334).

The palaeography of the Gorantla and Mattepad records suggests that the rule of king Attivarman and that of king Dāmodaravarman were not separated by a great interval. Considering the facts that the characters of the Gorantla inscription resemble, in some respects, those of the Ikṣvāku inscriptions of Nagarjunikonda (Ep. Ind., XX, p. 1 ff.) and that both Nagarjunikonda, the find-spot of some Ikṣvāku inscriptions, and Kanteru, that of some Śālaṅkāyana inscriptions are localities of the Guntur district, it seems to me that the Ānanda kings, whose inscriptions are also found in the same district, began to grow powerful about the middle of the 4th century A.D., when the power of the Pallava successors of the Ikṣvākus was gradually declining in the Andhra country. The Nagarjunikonda inscriptions have been assigned to the 3rd century A.D. and, as I shall show below, the Kanteru plates are to be ascribed to the 5th century A.D. Kings Attivarman and Dāmodaravarman may, therefore, be conjecturally placed about the second half of the 4th century of the Christian era.

But which of the two kings of the Ānanda family came earlier ? According to Hultzsch, the characters of the Gorantla inscription are more developed than those of the Mattepad grant which is besides partly written in Prakrit ; “ consequently Dāmodaravarman must have been one of the predecessors of Attivarman ” (Ep. Ind., XVII, p. 328).

As regards the first point, viz., that the characters of the Gorantla inscription are more developed, I must say that when two epigraphs belong to the same period it is extremely difficult to determine as to which of them is the earlier. In our section on the Viṣṇukunḍin genealogy below, we shall show that the Viṣṇukunḍin king Mādhavavarman II of the Ipur grant (No. 2) was suggested by Hultzsch, on palaeographical grounds, to have been the grandfather of Mādhavavarman (I) of the Ipur grant (No. 1). We shall also show there that the former was actually not the grandfather, but the grandson, of the latter.¹ Since the handwritings of two different scribes of even the same age may be quite dissimilar, I do not think it impossible that the difference in time between the execution of the Mattepad and that of the Gorantla grant is short and that Dāmodaravarman of the Mattepad grant was a successor of Attivarman on the throne of Kandarapura.²

² Cf. “ Not only the plates of the Pallavas but also those of the Gaṅgas and the Kadambas prove that the alphabets differ much according to the scribes, who have engraved the plates ; and the documents of the same reign do not sometimes resemble one another.” (Anc. Hist. Dec., pp. 65-66.)

As regards the second point, viz., that the Mattepad grant is partly written in Prakrit, I am afraid, it is a misrepresentation. In fact, the Mattepad plates are, like the Gorantla plates, written in Sanskrit; but it is true that the names of the Brāhmaṇa recipients of the king's gift are written in Prakrit, e.g., Kassava-Kumārajja (Sanskrit: Kāśyapa-Kumārārya), etc. We must notice, however, that the Gorantla inscription also exhibits the same peculiarity. I think it even more significant that the name of the king is here Attivarman and not Hastivarman. Atti is a Dravidic form of Sanskrit hastin, through the literary Prakrit from hatthi. Names like Attivarman,¹ Kumārajja, etc., only prove that both these grants were issued in a time when the replacement of Prakrit by Sanskrit in South Indian epigraphy was nearly, but not fully, complete.

There are, besides, two other points in support of our suggestion. Firstly, in the Gorantla inscription, the kandara-nrputi-kula has been called bhagavato vakeśvarādhi-vāsinas=tribhuvana-kartuḥ śambhoś=carana-kamala-rajah-pavitrikṛta, which appears to suggest that Sambhu (Śiva) was the family deity of the Ānanda kings and that they were Śaivas. On the other hand, Dāmodaravarman is called in his inscription bhagavataḥ samyaksambuddhasya pādānudhyāta, which clearly shows that he was a Buddhist. If the Ānanda kings prior to Attivarman were Śaivas, Dāmodaravarman who was a Buddhist would appear to have come after Attivarman. Secondly, the inscribed faces of the Mattepad plates of Dāmodaravarman are "numbered consecutively like the pages of a modern book." This fact also seems to suggest that Dāmodaravarman came after Attivarman.

¹ With the name of Attivarman may be compared that of Attumallaṇ, a feudatory of the Cola king Rājaraṇja (S. Ind. Ins., I, No 74). Attumallaṇ was also the surname of Kṛṣṇa III Rāṣṭrakūṭa. Compare also Attivarman in Kielhorn's List, No 1070, and "Attirāja or Attarasa, born at Nāraṇapura in the Andhra country" in Bomb. Gaz., I, Pt. II, p. 507

But, what was the relationship between these two kings of the Ānanda family, who, we think, were not far removed from each other in time?

In this connection, I like to draw the attention of readers to the epithet abandhya-gosahasr-āneka-hiranyagarbh-odbhav-odbhava applied to the name of king Dāmodaravarman in the Mattepad plates. This epithet has been translated by Hultsch as "who is the origin of the production (i.e., who has caused the performance) of many Hiranyagarbhas and of (gifts of) thousand pregnant cows." This translation is defective for several reasons.

We have seen that Hultsch has wrongly interpreted the passage hiranyagarbha-prasava as the "producer of the Hiranyagarbha." As we have shown, it should mean "one whose producer is the Hiranyagarbha." The corresponding passage of the Mattepad plates is hiranyagarbh-odbhava, which means exactly the same thing. Hultsch says: "he (scil. Dāmodaravarman) boasts of having performed certain Brahmanical rites, viz, Gosahasra and Hiranyagarbha (l. 2 f.)." But it seems to me hardly tenable that Dāmodaravarman who was professedly a Buddhist performed these rites which are professedly Brahmanical. Besides, if Hultsch's interpretation is right, why did the composer use hiranyagarbh-odbhav-odbhava and not hiranyagarbh-odbhava which is the naturally expected form? The use of hiranyagarbh-odbhav-odbhava in the sense of "performer of the Hiranyagarbha" seems to me highly awkward in an ordinary prose composition. The natural meaning of the phrase hiranyagarbh-odbhav-odbhava is "one whose udbhava (producer, father) is Hiranyagarbh-odbhava (i.e., performer of the Hiranyagarbha-mahādāna)"

As regards abandhya-gosahasra, I do not think that the word abandhya ever means "pregnant." Abandhya, i.e., not-barren, which also means amogha-phal-odaya (producer of unfailing good and prosperity) according to the Sanskrit lexicon Rājanirghaṇṭa, seems to refer not to go as Hultzsch has taken it, but to the Gosahasra, the fifth of the sixteen Mahādānas of the Purāṇas. The whole phrase abandhya-gosahasr-āneka-hiranya-garbh-odbhav-odbhava, then, means "one whose udbhava (i.e., father) is Abandhyagosahasra (i.e., performer of a Gosahasra producing unfailing success) and Aneka-hiraṇyagarbh-odbhava (i.e., performer of many Hiraṇyagarbhas).

Now, who is this Abandhya-gosahasra-Aneka-hiraṇyagarbh-odbhava, the udbhava (father) of king Dāmodaravarman? Curiously enough, in the Gorantla inscription, Attivarman is called aprameya-hiraṇyagarbha-prasava, which is obviously the same as aneka-hiraṇyagarbh-odbhava. I therefore do not think it quite impossible that it is king Attivarman who was the father of king Dāmodaravarman of the Mattepad plates. It may however be argued that the Mattepad plates credit the father of king Dāmodaravarman with the performance of a Gosahasra as well; but there is no reference to this Mahādāna in Attivarman's own Gorantla grant. The Gosahasra mahādāna may have been performed by Attivarman after the execution of the Gorantla grant. It may also be a case of the Argumentum ex Silentio.

ATTIVARMAN(=HASTIVARMAN).

As we have seen, the Ānanda king Attivarman was a devotee of Śaṃbhu (Śiva) and performed "many" Hiranyagarbhas. The performance of such a costly mahādāna as the Hiranyagarbha for more than once (and probably also of a Gosahasra) seems to show that he was a rich and powerful prince. His epithet pratāp-opanata-sakala-sāmanta-maṇḍala suggests that there were other ruling chiefs who acknowledged his suzerainty. His inscription tells us that he acquired fame in ruling his subjects with justice.

The Gorantla inscription records the gift of eight hundred paṭṭis (pieces) of land in the village of Tāṇḷikonḷa on the southern bank of the Kṛṣṇabeṇṇā (i.e., the Krishna; see infra, and Bomb. Gaz., I, ii, p. 334 n) river and also of the village of Āntukkūra, to a Brāhmaṇa named Koṭṭisārman, who belonged to the Kāśyapa-gotra. The name of the village, read now as Tanḷikonḷa by Hultzsch, was originally read by Fleet as Tānthikontha (Ep. Ind., VII, p. 328). The village has been identified by Hultzsch with the modern Tāḍikonḍa, ten miles to the north of Guntur and to the south of the Krishna. Āntukkūra, according to him, is probably modern Gani-Ātkūru to the west of Bezvāḍa. The recipient Koṭṭisārman has been described as knowing the Āpastamba-sūtra and also the three Vedas, viz., Rk, Yajus and Sāman.

The seal of king Attivarman attached to the Gorantla plates is circular. "The emblem on it is probably some god, sitting cross-legged on an altar, but it is anything but clear, even in the original" (Ind. Ant., IX. p. 102). The figure is shunk in the flat surface of the seal, instead of being raised in relief on a counter-sunk surface as is usually the case.

DĀMODARAVARMAN.

We have already said much about this king. The Mattepad grant was issued on the 13th day of the bright half of Kārttika in the 2nd regnal year of the king. It records the grant of the village of Kamgūrā with all parihāras, to a number of Brāhmaṇas. Parihāra, i.e., "immunity, privilege, exemption from taxes," is mentioned in Kautilya's Arthaśāstra (Shamasastri's 2nd ed., p. 73). The parihāras are sometimes stated to be of eighteen kinds, but are very often referred to as sarvajāta-parihāra (immunities of all kinds). For some of them see pages 43-44 above. The Mattepad grant was issued from the victorious city of Kandarapura which was possibly the capital of the kings of the Ānanda line. The recipients of the grant were the following: Ruddajja (Rudrārya), Nandijja (Nandyārya), Khandajja (Skandārya), Bhavajja (Bhavārya), Agnijja (Agniyārya), Sirijja (Śryārya), Savarajja (Sabarārya) and Virajja (Vīrārya) of the Koṇḍinna (Kaundinya)-gotra, Dāmajja (Dāmārya), Kumārajja (Kumārārya), Venujja (Viṣṇvārya), Devajja (Devārya) Nandijja and Dīnajja (Dīnārya) of the Kassava (Kāśyapa)-gotra and Bhaddajja (Bhadrārya) of the Āgasti-gotra.

The seal of Dāmodaravarman attached to the Mattepad plates is oval and is said to be much worn. It bears in relief, according to Hultzsch, the figure of a "seated bull" facing the proper right.

We do not know who succeeded Dāmodaravarman on the throne of Kandarapura. The end of the Ānanda dynasty is wrapped up in obscurity. They were possibly subdued or supplanted by the Śālaṅkāyanas in the 5th century A.D.

CHAPTER IV. THE ŚĀLĀṆKĀYANAS.

GENEALOGY OF THE ŚĀLĀṆKĀYANAS.¹

While editing the Kolleru (Kollair) grant of the Śālāṅkāyana Mahārāja Nandivarman, son of Caṇḍavarman, in Ind. Ant., Vol. V, p. 175 ff. (Sanskrit and Old-Canarese Inscriptions : No. XVIII), Fleet remarked : “ In Sir W. Elliot’s facsimiles I have [found] another copper-plate inscription of Vijayanandivarmā and his Yuvamahārāja, whose name seems to be Vijayatuṅgavarmā or Vijayabudhavarmā.” He appended the following note to the name of the Yuvamahārāja : “ The original has, l. 3, ‘ Vijāyabuṅgavarmassa,’ and in the margin, a little above the line, there is the character ‘ ddha ’—differing not much from ‘ nga ’ as there written—apparently intended to be introduced somewhere in the line as a correction.” Now, as we shall presently see, this statement regarding the inscription is really wrong and was subsequently corrected by Fleet himself. But, unfortunately, the blunder has become parmanent in later writings on the Śālāṅkāyana genealogy.

En passant, I may draw the attention of readers to the names of these kings generally accepted and used by scholars. The names can hardly be Vijayanandivarman, Vijayabuddhavarman and the like.

The Śālaṅkāyana inscriptions are stated to be issued from Siri-vijaya-veṅgīpura, Vijaya-veṅgīpura or Vijaya-veṅgī. The Kadamba grants are generally issued from Śrī-vijaya-vaijayantī, Śrī-vijaya-triparvata and Śrī-vijaya-palāśikā.¹ The Mattepad plates of Dāmodaravarman (Ep. Ind., XVII, p. 327 ff.) were issued from Vijaya-kandarapura. We have also references to Śrī-vijaya-kāñcīpura, Śrī-vijaya-palakkada and Śrī-vijaya-daśanapura in some of the Pallava inscriptions (Ep. Ind., III, p. 142 ff., and I, p. 297 ; Ind. Ant., V, p. 50 ff., p. 154 ff.). There can be no doubt that the names of the places are Veṅgīpura, Kāñcīpura, Vaijayantī, Palāśikā, etc., and that vijaya or śrī-vijaya has been prefixed to them simply for the sake of glorification. I have no doubt that the name of the Śālaṅkāyana Maḥārāja of the Kollair grant is similarly Nandivarman, and not Śrī-vijaya- or Vijaya-nandivarman, as is generally taken to be. Vijaya and Śrī-vijaya, in such cases, mean vijaya-yukta and Śrī-vijaya-yukta respectively.² When prefixed to proper names, they make examples of the Tatpuruṣa compound of the Śakapārthivādī class. The word jaya is also used in this way. As for instance. Karmānta (modern [Baḍ] -Kāntā near Comilla) has been mentioned as jaya-Karmānta-vāsaka in the Ashrafpur plate of Devakhaḍga (Bhandarkar, List, No. 1588). It must also be noticed that in the Peddavegi and Kanteru (No. 2) grants the reigning Śālaṅkāyana king is simply called Nandivarman. Note also that the Pallava king Skandavarman II in his own Omgodu (No. 1) grant (Ep. Ind., XV, p. 246) calls himself Śrī-vijaya-Skandavarman, while in the Uruvupalli grant of his son Viṣṇugopavarman (Ind. Ant., V, p. 50) and in the Omgodu (No. 2), Pikira (ibid., XV, p. 246 ; VIII. p. 159) and Mangalur (Ind. Ant., V, p. 154) grants of his grandson Simhavarman he is simply called Skandavarman.

Cf. teṣāṃ śrī-vijayaḥ = c = aiva sarāṣṭrāṇāṃ bhaviṣyati Mahābhā., I, 68, 24.

To come to our point. The first scholar who accepted the wrong information of Fleet and added thereto something of his own, seems to be Prof. Dubreuil, the author of Ancient History of the Deccan (Pondicherry, 1920) Before he wrote, a Prakrit copper-plate inscription of another Śālaṅkāyana Mahārāja Devavarman, had been discovered near Ellore. It was edited by Hultzsch in Ep. Ind., Vol. IX, p. 56 ff. In Ancient History of the Deccan, Dubreuil therefore speaks of four Śālaṅkāyana monarchs, viz.,

1. Devavarman of the Ellore plates,
2. Caṇḍavarman, and his son
3. Nandivarman of the Kollair plates,
4. Buddhavarman, son of (3) Nandivarman mentioned in the facsimile referred to by Fleet. As regards Buddhavarman, Dubreuil has quoted the passage of Fleet, and remarked: "This name is probably Buddhavarman, for in the margin, there is the character dha" (Anc. Hist Dec., p. 89). Evidently the Professor goes a step further. I do not know from which authority he learnt that the letter in the margin is dha and not ddha, as is attested by Fleet.

The mistake was next repeated by K. V. Lakshmana Rao who edited the two copper-plate grants discovered at Kanteru, one belonging to the Śālaṅkāyana Mahārāja Nandivarman and the other to the Śālaṅkāyana Mahārāja Skandavarman.¹ Like Dubreuil, Lakshmana Rao has quoted the same passage of Fleet and has taken "Vijaya Buddhavarman" as a king belonging to the Śālaṅkāyana dynasty (Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., Vol. V, p. 26). It is to be noted that Fleet hesitatingly proposed an alternative of two names, viz., Tungavarman and Buddhavarman, with a slight inclination towards the latter ; then Dubreuil showed favour for the name Buddhavarman ; and now Lakshmana Rao takes Buddhavarman as an established name in the genealogy of the Śālaṅkāyanas.

Next we come to R. Subba Rao, who has edited the Peddavegi copper-plates of the Śālaṅkāyana - Mahārāja Nandivarman II (ibid., Vol. I, p. 92 ff.). He refers to five inscriptions belonging to the Śālaṅkāyana kings. " Of these a Prakrit inscription which was discovered by Mr. (? Sir Walter) Elliot remains unpublished : but two kings (?) mentioned in it are known to us as Vijayanandivarman Yuvamahārāja (?) and Vijayabuddhavarman. The late Mr. Lakshmana Rao edited in Andhra Sāhitya-Parishat-Patrikā, Vol. XI, two Śālaṅkāyana inscriptions discovered in Kanteru near Guntur and these belong to Nandivarman and Skandavarman. Another Śālaṅkāyana inscription discovered in Kallair lake and (sic.) which belongs to Vijaya Nandivarman, eldest son of Chaṇḍavarman, was published in Indian Antiquary, Vol. V, by Mr. Elliot (? Dr. Fleet). A Prakrit inscription discovered at Ellore which belongs to Vijaya Devavarman was published in Epigraphia Indica, Vol. IX " (ibid., p. 93). By this time, everything is complete.¹

I am afraid, these scholars have not carefully read all the inscriptions edited by Fleet in his well-known " Sanskrit and Old-Canarese Inscriptions " series. It is however wrong to say that " a Prakrit inscription which was discovered by Mr. Elliot remains unpublished." It was actually published by Fleet in Ind. Ant., IX, p. 100 ff. (Sans. Old-Can. Ins., No. LXXIV). " This is the grant of Vijayabuddhavarmā," he says there, "of which I have spoken at Vol. V, p. 175. I now give the text from the original plates which belong to Sir Walter Elliot."

Fleet's reading of the grant is as follows :

L. 1. Siddha Sirivijayakhandavamma-mahārājassa Samvachhara.....

L. 2. Yuvamahārājassa Bhāraṭṭāyana Pallavā-

L. 3. ṇaṃ Sirivijayabuddhavarmassa devī.....

L. 4. kujana vīhā (?) rudevī Kaḍā (?) vīya.....

No argument is necessary to prove that the inscription belongs to the Pallavas and refers to the king Skandavarman and the Crown-prince Buddhavarman, and that it has nothing to do with the Śālankāyanas. Fleet was himself conscious of what he said before, and remarked (ibid., p. 101): "And Vijayabuddhavarmā is said to be a Pallava, and of the Bhāraṭṭāyana gotra. There is therefore, no genealogical connection between the Vijayabuddhavarmā of this grant and the Vijayanandivarmā of the Vengī grant at Vol. V, p. 175, who was of the Śālankāyana gotra." Fleet, however, could not translate the inscription, as it is written in Prakrit. It has later been carefully edited by Hultzsch in Ep. Ind., VIII (p. 143 ff., "British Museum Plates of Chārudēvī" with "Plates of Vijaya-Skandavarman and Vijaya-Buddhavarman"). The first plate has been thus deciphered and translated by Hultzsch :

Siddha//

L. 1. Siri-Vijaya-Khandava[m]ma-mahārājassa samvvachchhar[ā].....[/*]

L. 2. Yuvamahārājassa Bhāraddāyassa Pallavā-

L. 3. ṇaṃ Si[ri]-vijaya-Buddhavarmassa dēvī [Bu-] ddhi.....

L. 4. kura-janavī Chārudēvī ka[ḍake] vīya.....[/*]

“ Success! The years (of the reign) of the glorious Mahārāja Vijaya-Skandavarman. Chārudēvī, the queen of the Yuvamahārāja, the Bhāradvāja, the glorious Vijaya-Buddhavarman (of the family) of the Pallavas (and) mother of [Buddhyan]kura, (addresses the following order) [to the official at] Ka[taka].”

There can, then, be no question of a Buddhavarman in the genealogy of the Śālaṅkāyanas.

The following kings are so far known from inscriptions to have belonged to the Śālaṅkāyana dynasty :—

- | | |
|--------------------------|--|
| 1. Ellore Prakrit grant | (i) Devavarman. |
| 2. Kollair grant | (i) Caṇḍavarman ; |
| | (ii) Nandivarman, the eldest son of Caṇḍavarman. |
| 3. Peddavegi grant | (i) Hastivarman ; |
| | (ii) Nandivarman I, son of Hastivarman ; |
| | (iii) Caṇḍavarman, son of Nandivarman I ; |
| | (iv) Nandivarman II, eldest son of Caṇḍavarman. |
| 4. Kanteru grant (No. 1) | (i) Skandavarman. |
| 5. Kanteru grant (No. 2) | (i) Nandivarman. |

There can be no doubt that Nandivarman of the Kollair grant is identical with Nandivarman II of the Peddavegi grant, since both of them are described in the inscriptions as “the eldest son of Caṇḍavarman.” It is however not quite clear whether Nandivarman of the Kanteru grant (No. 2) is identical with either of the two Nandivarmans of the Peddavegi plates or he is a third king different from them. Nevertheless, it seems reasonable to identify him with Nandivarman II of the Peddavegi grant. Both in the Kollair and the Peddavegi grants Nandivarman II is called bhagavac-citrarathasvāmi-pād-ānudhyāto bappa-bhaṭṭaraka-pāda-bhaktah parama-bhāgavataś = śālāṅkāyana. It is interesting to note that exactly the same epithets have been applied to Nandivarman also in the plates discovered at Kanteru. It must moreover be noted that the king has the epithet parama-bhāgavata in all these three inscriptions and that no other Śālāṅkāyana king is as yet known to have used this epithet. It appears, then, almost certain that Nandivarman of the Kanteru plates is also, like the king of the same name of the Kollair grant, identical with Nandivarman II of the Peddavegi plates. There is unfortunately nothing from which we can determine the precise relationship that existed between Devavarman or Skandavarman on the one hand and the line of the remaining four kings on the other.

As the Ellore grant is written in Prakrit, there can hardly be any doubt that king Devavarman ruled before Skandavarman and Nandivarman II who used Sanskrit in their inscriptions. The character of the Peddavegi plates of Nandivarman II appear to be slightly more developed than that used in the Ellore plates of Devavarman. Devavarman, therefore, may be placed before Hastivarman who appears to have been succeeded regularly by his son, grandson and great-grandson. Considering the facts that the inscriptions of Nandivarman II are to be palaeographically assigned to about the middle of the 5th century A.D., and that he was preceded by three kings of his line, it seems probable that Skandavarman of the Kanteru grant came after Nandivarman II. We however do not know whether Devavarman was the immediate predecessor of Hastivarman¹ or Skandavarman the immediate successor of Nandivarman II.¹ The genealogical tree then stands thus :

It may be noticed here that this Śālanākāyana Hastivarman of the Peddavegi plates can hardly be any other than the vaiṅgeyaka-Hastivarman, mentioned in the famous Allahabad pillar inscription of Samudragupta.² The main arguments in favour of this assertion are the following :

(i) The Śālanākāyana line is the only dynasty which can be properly called vaiṅgeyaka (belonging to Veṅgī), as all the grants of the Śālanākāyana kings are issued from Veṅgīpura. No other early dynasty is known to have had its headquarters at the city of Veṅgī.³

² Corp. Ins. Ind., Vol. III, No. 1; see however Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., I, p. 93. Even recent works on Indian history regard Vaiṅgeyaka Hastivarman of the Allahabad pillar inscription as a Pallava king or a Pallava viceroy of the king of Kāñci. See, as for instance, Sewell's List (1932), p. 375

(ii) The Śālaṅkāyanas ruled according to Dubreuil, "between 350 and 450 A.D." (op. cit., p. 87); and Bunnell thought that the Kollair grant of Nandivarman may be palaeographically assigned to the 4th century A.D. (South Indian Palaeography, p. 14, n. 2). It is therefore generally accepted that the Śālaṅkāyanas ruled contemporaneously with the early Guptas (320-467 A.D.).

As regards the date proposed by Dubreuil, it may be said that the Śālaṅkāyanas certainly began to rule long before 350 A.D. Prof. H. C. Raychaudhuri (Pol. Hist. Anc. Ind., 3rd ed., p. 341, n. 1) has rightly identified the Śālaṅkāyanas with the Salakēnoi mentioned in the Geography of Ptolemy (about 140 A.D.). Ptolemy says: "Beyond the Maisōloi (cf. Masulipatam) are the Salakēnoi near the Arouaia mountains, with the following cities: Bēnagouron from Daśanapura, which had been identified by Venkayya with modern Darsi in the Nellore district (Ind. Ant., 1908, p. 293). "None of these places Tambrāpa, Palakkada, Daśanapura or Menmātura (from where some Sanskrit charters of the Pallavas were issued) has been identified definitely, although a suggestion has been made by the late Mr Venkayya that they are to be looked for in the vicinity of the region comprised by the modern Nellore district" (R. Gopalan, Pallavas of Kanchi, p. 55). Prof. Dubreuil also places the Daśanapura region in the Nellore and Guntur districts (Anc. Hist. Dec., p. 69). The Veṅgī country, we know, lay "between the Krishna and the Godavari." If this Veṅgorāṣṭra refers to the country of Veṅgī, it may be assumed that, at the time of Simhavarman Pallava, the southern fringe of this country was under the possession of the Pallavas. There is however, as yet no evidence to prove that the capital city of Veṅgī was ever occupied by the Pallavas. We must also note that even the grandfather of this Simhavarman used Sanskrit in his inscription (cf. Omgudi plates of Skandavarman II: Ep. Ind., XV, p. 246 ff.). It is generally accepted that Sanskrit was introduced in Southern inscriptions in the 4th century A.D. Simhavarman therefore came some time after the reign of Samudragupta. See infra.

It may however be conjectured that with the extension of the Veṅgī kingdom under the Śālaṅkāyanas, the name Veṅgī also extended over Andhradeśa, as far south as Karmarāṣṭra (northern part of Nellore and southern part of Guntur). Veṅgorāṣṭra in the possession of the Pallavas is, then, to be conjectured to have been originally the southernmost part of the Śālaṅkāyana kingdom. There is however no evidence to prove that the Pallavas were in possession of the city of Veṅgī.

140° 24°; Kastrā 138° 19° 30'; Magarīs 137° 30' 18° 20' '' (Geography, VII, i, § 79). Bēnagouron, the premier city of the Salakēnoi, appears to me to be a mistake for Bēngaouron (Beṅgapura) which is no other than the well-known Veṅgīpura (cf. Veṅgorāṣṭra of the Mangalur grant).

As regards the conjecture of Burnell, I may simply point out that, if we compare the characters of the Kollair plates (Ind. Ant., V, p. 175 and Pls.) with those of the inscriptions of the early Eastern Calukyas¹ and of the Viṣṇukunḍins,² it becomes impossible for us to accept such an early date for the Kollair grant. I have no hesitation in asserting that palaeography has nothing to say against the ascription of the inscriptions of Nandivarman II to the middle of the 5th century A.D. It is then quite possible that his great-grandfather Hastivarman ruled about a century earlier and was a contemporary of Samudragupta (circa 330 to 375 A.D.).

(iii) Lastly, excepting this Śālaṅkāyana Hastivarman we do not know of any other king, who ruled at Veṅgī, whose name was Hastivarman and who can any how be placed in the middle of the 4th century A.D. which is the time of Samudragupta.

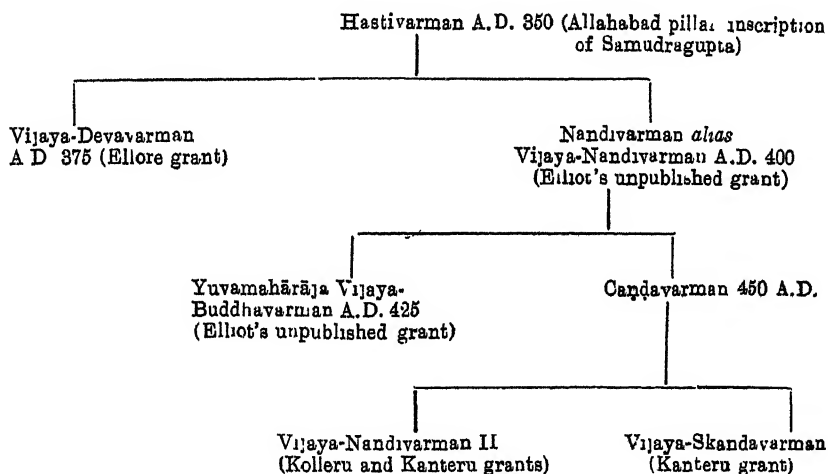

Accepting the contemporaneity of Samudragupta and Śālaṅkāyana Hastivarman (c. 350 A.D.), we may draw the following approximate chronological chart of the Śālaṅkāyana Mahārājas.

We have tried to prove above the following points: (1) Devavarman probably ruled earlier than Hastivarman and therefore may not have been the latter's son; (2) there was no Śālaṅkāyana inscription in Elliot's collection and there was no prince named Buddhavarman in the Śālaṅkāyana family, (3) the relation between Skandavarman and Caṇḍavarman is not definitely known.

CANĀVARMAN, LORD OF KALINGA¹

In his latest work, Historical Inscriptions of Southern India (1932), p. 18, s. v. A.D. 340, the late Mr. Sewell has thus remarked on the Komarti grant : " About the fourth century A.D. A set of plates from Komarti in Ganjam, dated in the sixth regnal year of the Śālaṅkāyana chief Caṇḍavarman." The late Dr. K. P. Jayaswal in his work, History of India (1933), even goes so far as to suggest that the Śālaṅkāyanas ruled not only in Kalinga but belonged originally also to Magadha (pp. 127-28) Sewell and Jayaswal here evidently follow the views of Hultzsch who, while editing the Komarti plates in Ep. Ind., IV, p. 142 ff., was inclined to identify king Caṇḍavarman mentioned in this inscription with the Śālaṅkāyana Mahārāja Caṇḍavarman, father of Nandivarman II. Kielhorn, who entered the Kolleru inscription of Nandivarman II Śālaṅkāyana in his List of Inscriptions of Northern India (Ep. Ind., V, App., No. 686) was obviously of the same opinion.² Prof. Dubreuil remains silent about the suggestion of Hultzsch, when he discusses the Komarti grant (Anc. Hist. Dec, p. 94), though he does not take up the suggestion of Hultzsch. We may not accept the identification, but such great authorities in South Indian epigraphy as Hultzsch and Kielhorn cannot be passed over in silence. Moreover, a discussion on this

² Following Kielhorn, D. R. Bhandarkar has also entered the Śālaṅkāyana inscriptions in his List of Inscriptions of Northern India (Ep. Ind., XX-XXIII, App., Nos. 2087-91), point has now become indispensable after some scholars have accepted the old suggestion made by Hultzsch and supported by Kielhorn.

Regarding the Komarti plates, Hultzsch says that "a connection may be established with the plates (i.e., the Kollair plates) of the Śālaṅkāyana Mahārāja Vijayanandivarman, who (1) like Chaṇḍavarman, professes to have been devoted to the feet of the lord, (his) father (bappa-bhaṭṭāraka-pāda-bhakta), and who (2) was the eldest son of Mahārāja Chaṇḍavarman. The close resemblance between the alphabets of the plates of Vijayanandivarman and of the Komarti plates suggests that Chaṇḍavarman, the father of Vijayanandivarman, may have been identical with the Mahārāja Chaṇḍavarman who issued the Komarti plates."

I agree with Hultzsch that the characters of the Komarti plates resemble closely those of the plates of Nandivarman II Śālaṅkāyana, and that, therefore, "the two Chaṇḍavarmans must have belonged to the same period." But it is difficult to go beyond that. There are some serious points against the identification of the issuer of the Komarti plates with the Śālaṅkāyana Mahārāja Chaṇḍavarman.

The Komarti plates were found near Narasannapeta in the Ganjam district. The grant was issued from vijaya-Simhapura which has been identified with modern Singupuram between Chicacole and Narasannapeta.¹ On the other hand, all the known Śālaṅkāyana grants were issued from Vengīpura which has been identified with Peddavegi near Ellore in the Godavari district and which appears to have been the chief city of the Śālaṅkāyanas as early as the time of Ptolemy.

It must be noted that Caṇḍavarman of the Komarti grant calls himself Kalingādhipati (lord of Kalinga); but no Śālaṅkāyana Mahārāja so far known claims mastery over the Kalinga country. The issuers of all the Śālaṅkāyana grants invariably call themselves Śālaṅkāyana and also Bhagavac-citrarathasvāmi-pād-ānudyāta, i.e., favoured¹ by the feet of lord Citrarathasvāmin who must have been the family deity of the Śālaṅkāyanas. It must also be noticed that both these distinctive epithets are conspicuous by their absence in the Komarti grant.

Besides, the phraseology of the Komarti grant seems to be different from that of the known Śālaṅkāyana inscriptions. Two points at least deserve notice in this connection. First, the king of the Komarti grant calls himself Śrī-mahārājā(ja)-Caṇḍavarmā, while all the issuers of the Śālaṅkāyana grants invariably call themselves Mahārāja-śrī-so-and-so. Secondly, the phrase ā-sahasrāmśu-śaśi-tārakā-pratiṣṭha used as an adjective of agrahāra, and the idea conveyed by it, are unknown to the phraseology of the known Śālaṅkāyana inscriptions which, we should note, are marked by a striking similarity of language among themselves.

Such being the case, we must take the issuer of the Komarti plates as belonging to a separate dynasty, until further evidence is forthcoming.² It seems probable that the dynasty to which Caṇḍavarman of the Komarti grant belongs ruled over the Kalinga country (or the major part of it) with its capital at Simhapura, when the Śālaṅkāyanas ruled over the country to the west of the Kalinga region with their capital at Veṅgīpura. The country of the Śālaṅkāyanas was the heart of what is called Andhradeśa in Sanskrit literature. In the inscriptions of the Eastern Calukyas, it has been designated Veṅgīmaṇḍala, Veṅgīrāṣṭra, Veṅgīmahī and the like. Probably the country was called "the Veṅgī kingdom" even in the Śālaṅkāyana period.

Another king of the dynasty of Siṃhapura seems to have been the issuer of the Brihatprostha grant (issued from viṇaya-Siṃhapura, i.e., Siṃhapura), edited by Hultzsch in Ep. Ind., XII, p. 4 ff. The name of the king who issued this grant has been taken to be Umavarman. According to Hultzsch, "both the alphabet and the phraseology of the grant closely resemble those of the Komarti plates of Mahārāja Chaṇḍavarman. This king may have belonged to the same family as the Mahārāj-omavarman.....For both kings issued their edicts from Siṃhapura (or Siṃhapura) and bore the epithets 'lord of Kalinga' and 'devoted to the feet of (his) father.'"¹

The characters of the Komarti grant closely resemble those of another inscription, the Chicacole grant of Nanda-² Prabhañjanavarman. The two phraseological peculiarities

¹ Ep. Ind., XII, p. 4. Hultzsch is not quite accurate in the last point. Canḍavarman is called Bappa-bhaṭṭāraka-pāda bhakta, while Umavarman is called Bappa-pāda-bhakta in the inscription. The Tekkal record issued from viṇaya-Vardhamānapura seems to be dated in the ninth year of this king Umavarman (Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., VI, p. 53 f). I do not think that the Tekkal grant belongs to a different king. A third record of Umavarman is the Dhavalapeta grant issued from Sunagara (ibid., pp. X, 143-44).

² Ind. Ant., XIII, p. 48 f. The name so long taken by scholars as Nanda-prabhañjanavarman probably signifies Prabhañjanavarman of the Nanda family. For a reference to the Nanda or Nandodbhava dynasty in the Kalinga region, see the Talmul plates of the Nanda Vilāsatuṅga-Dhruvānanda of the year 298 (J. B. O. R. S., XIV, p. 90 ff). The date if referred to the Harsa era would correspond to A. D. 890. These Nandas or Nandodbhavas appear to have claimed descent from the mighty Nandas who ruled at Pāṭaliputra before the Mauryas. It may be interesting in this connection to note that a certain Nandarāja is referred to in the famous Hathigumpha inscription of Khāravela, king of Kalinga (Ep. Ind., XX, p. 79 f., lines 6 and 12). If the king may be identified with Prabhañjanavarman, "the moon of the Vasīṣṭha family," we are to believe that he was connected with the Vasīṣṭhas on his mother's side.

of the Kommarti grant noticed above are present in the Chicacole grant. We may therefore agree with Hultsch when he says, "The phraseology of the grant resembles that of the copper-plate grants of the Gaṅgas of Kalinga, but still much more closely with that of the Chicacole plates of Nandaprabhañjanavarman. Another point in which the last mentioned plates agree with the Komarti plates is that in both of them the title Kaliṅgādhipati, i.e., 'lord (of the country) of Kalinga' is applied to the reigning prince. There remains a third point, which proves that Chaṇḍavarman and Nandaprabhañjanavarman must have belonged to the same dynasty. An examination of the original seal of the Chicacole plates, which Mr. Thurston, Superintendent of the Madras Museum, kindly sent me at my request, revealed the fact that the legend on the seal is Pi[tri-bhakta], just as on the seal of the Komarti plates."¹ The Chicacole grant was, however, not issued from Simhapura or Sīhapura, but from viṣaya-Sārapallikā-vāsaka, "the residence or palace (or camp?) at the victorious Sārapallikā." It is not clear whether Sārapallikā was the capital of the Kaliṅgādhipati Nanda-Prabhañjanavarman; but the explicit mention of the term vāsaka (residence, dwelling) probably suggests that it was not the permanent capital of his family.²

The Koroshandra plates (Ep. Ind, XXI, p. 23 ff.) of the same age record the grant of a village called Tampoyaka in Korāsoḍaka-Pañcālī by a Mahārāja named Viśakhavarman. It is known from the Chicacole grant of Indravarman (Ind. Ant., XIII, p. 122 ff.) that this Korāsoḍaka-Pañcālī formed a part of the Kalinga country. G Ramadas therefore thinks that Viśakhavarman was a Kaliṅgādhipati like Chaṇḍavarman and Umavarman (Ep. Ind, XXI, p. 24).

² The term vāsaka and the similar term skandhāvāṣa sometimes appear to mean "the temporary residence (therefore, the temporary capital) of a king" See supra.

The grant however was issued from Śrīpura which has been identified with Siripuram in the Vizagapatam district.

On palaeographic grounds, these kings should be assigned to about the time of Nandivarman II Śālaṅkāyana, i.e., about the 5th century A.D.¹ It is, therefore, impossible to agree with the late Prof. R. D. Banerji when he writes,² " We do not know anything of the history of Kālīṅga and Orissa after the fall of the dynasty of Khāravela (2nd century B.C. according to the Professor) till the rise of the Śailodbhavas in the 7th century A.D."

It is difficult to determine whether this line of the kings of Kālīṅga was ruling at the time of the southern expedition of Samudragupta (c. 350 A.D.). It is, however, interesting to note that the Allahabad pillar inscription does not refer to any king of Kālīṅga, nor of Sīmhapura, Śārāpallikā and Śrīpura. The states mentioned there, that may be conjecturally assigned to the Kālīṅga region, are Kurāla, Koṭṭūra, Piṣṭapura, Eraṇḍapalla, Avamukta and Deva-rāṣṭra. Of these Piṣṭapura has been definitely identified with Piṭhapuram in the Godavari district. That it was the seat of a Government in the beginning of the 7th century A.D., is proved by the passage piṣṭam piṣṭapuram yena in the Aihole inscription of Pulakeśin II.³ We have got an inscription of a Kālīṅg-ādhipati Vāsiṣṭhīputra Śaktivarman of the Māṭhara family(?) who granted from Piṣṭapura the village of Rākaluva in the Kālīṅga-viṣaya (Ep. Ind., XII, p. 1 ff.). Rākaluva has been identified with Rāgolu, the findspot of the copper-plates, near Chicacole in the Ganjam district. The characters of the inscription seem to resemble those of the Vengī and Sīmhapura inscriptions, and may, therefore, be assigned to about the 5th century A.D. But the phraseology is remarkably different from that of the inscriptions of the Simhapura line. It therefore may be conjectured that Śaktivarman belonged to a separate line or branch line, that of Piṣṭapura, which was probably supplanted by the Calukyas in the beginning of the 7th century A.D. The epithet kalingādhīpati seems to suggest that the claim of kalingādhīpatitva of one of the two rival lines of Piṣṭapura and Simhapura was, at one time, challenged by the other.¹

² History of Orissa, I, ch. VIII (Kālīṅga and Orissa in the Scythian and Gupta periods), p. 109.

³ Ep. Ind., VI, p. 4 ff.

Another grant (Arch. Surv. Ind., A. R., 1934-35, pp. 64-65) mentions a Kalingādhīpati named Anantavarman whose adhiṣṭhāna (capital) was Piṣṭapura and who was the son of Prabhañjanavarman, "the moon of the Vasiṣṭha family," and the grandson of Guṇavarman, lord of Devarāṣṭra (mentioned in the Allahabad pillar inscription and in the Kasimkota grant of Cālukya-Bhīma I and identified with the Yellamanchili area of the Vizagapatam district).²

The names of the other states mentioned above cannot be satisfactorily identified. It does not appear quite unreasonable to think that after the downfall of the Ceta dynasty to which the great Khāravela belonged, Kalinga became split up into a number of petty principalities and that the same state continued as late as the time of Samudragupta's invasion. The history of Kalinga about the 5th century A.D. was possibly marked by the rivalry between the royal houses of Piṣṭapura and Simhapura for the supreme authority over Kalinga. The line of

² Besides these "lords of Kalinga" there is reference in the Sarabhaṇa plaques (Ep. Ind., XIII, p. 304), to an unnamed "lord of Cikura." This "lord of Cikura," according to Prof. Dubreuil, was "probably not a king of Kalinga but only a simple feudatory" (Anc. Hist. Dec., p. 94).

Simhapura was possibly overthrown by the Gaṅgas about the of the 6th century A.D.¹

In conclusion let me refer summarily to the four grants of the kings of Śarabhapura (Bhandarkar's List, Nos. 1878-1881). These grants are assigned to the 8th century A.D., but may be a little earlier. The above four inscriptions, all issued from Śarabhapura, have been found in C. P.; but, according to Sten Konow (Ep. Ind., XIII, p. 108), Śarabhapura may probably be identical with the modern village of Śarabhavaram, in the Chodavaram division, ten miles east from the bank of the Godavari and twenty miles from Rajahmundry. L. P. Pandeya has described (Ind. Hist. Quart., IX, p. 595) a coin belonging to the Śarabhapura kings whom he takes to be feudatories of the Pāṇḍava kings of Kosala. If the identification of Sten Konow is correct we have another royal family in the Kaliṅga country, the earlier members of which family may have ruled about the end of the 6th century.

¹ Curiously enough we find a line of kings, with names ending in -varman ruling over parts of Eastern and Southern Bengal in about the tenth and eleventh centuries A. D. The ancestors of these "Varmans"—as they style themselves in their inscriptions—are said to have once occupied Simhapura. Cf. varmāno = 'tigabhīra-nāma dadhataḥ ślāghyau bhūyau bibhrato bhejūḥ simhapuram guhām = va mrgendrānām harer = bāndhavāḥ. Belava grant of Bhojavarman (Ep. Ind., XII, p. 37), son of Sāmala-varman, grandson of Jātavarman and great-grandson of Vajravarman. The Bengal Varmans, like the Varmans of the Lakkhamandal inscription, trace their descent from Yadu. Evidently they claim connection with the Yādavas (cf. harer = bāndhavāḥ in the passage quoted above). It is possible that a second branch of the Punjab Varmans migrated into Bengal. It may also be conjectured that the Varmans of Kaliṅga when they were displaced from Simhapura (by the Eastern Gaṅgas ?), marched towards the east and carved out a principality somewhere in South or South-East Bengal. They appear to have supplanted the Candra dynasty of Eastern Bengal possibly after it was shaken by the defeat of "Govindacandra of Vamgāladēśa," inflicted by that Indian Napoleon, Gaṅgaikonda Rāendra Cola I, in about 1023 A. D.

THE TERM Śālāṅkāyana AND THE RELIGION OF THE ŚĀLĀṆKĀYANAS

The word Śālāṅkāyana, according to the Sanskrit lexicons Trikāṇḍaśeṣa and Medinī, means Nandin, the famous attendant or vāhana of Śiva. It is interesting to note that the figure of a bull (i.e., Nandin) is found on the seals of the Śālāṅkāyana kings, whose copper-plate grants have so far been discovered (vide infra). It is therefore not quite impossible that the Bull crest (and banner ?) of the Śālāṅkāyana kings was connected with the name of their family.

Fleet, while editing the Kollair plates, suggested that the term Śālāṅkāyana signifies the Śālāṅkāyana-gotra. Though the Śālāṅkāyana kings are never called Śālāṅkāyana-sagotra according to the fashion in which gotras are referred to in early South Indian inscriptions, the theory of Fleet cannot be dismissed as impossible. There are, however, more than one gotra of the name of Śālāṅkāyana, and it is not possible to find out to which one of these gotras our kings belonged. There is one gotra called Śālāṅkāyana which belongs to the Viśvāmitra section and has the pravaras Viśvāmitra, Kātya and Ātīla. But the word Śālāṅkāyana used in the Ellore grant of Devavarman seems to be the Prakṛit form of Śālāṅkāyana which is the spelling used in all the other grants of the family. There are however four gotrarṣis named Śālāṅkāyana. The first of them belongs to the Bhṛgu section and has the pravaras Bhārgava, Vaitahavya and Sāvedasa. The second belongs to the Bharadvāja section and has the pravaras Āṅgīrasa, Bārhaspatya, Bhāradvāja, Sainya and Gārgya. The third belongs to the Viśvāmitra section and has the pravaras Vaiśvāmitra, Daivarāta and Audala; the fourth also belongs to the Viśvāmitra section, but has the pravaras Vaiśvāmitra, Śālaṅkāyana and Kauśika (see P. C. Rao, Gotra-nibandha-kadambam, Mysore).

We know very little of the early history of the Śālaṅkāyanas. It has been supposed (Journ Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., V, p. 23) that the terms Śālaṅkāyana and Śālaṅkāyanaka (country of the Śālaṅkāyanas) are mentioned in the Gaṇapāṭha of Pāṇini. It is however certain that the Śālaṅkāyanas (Greek · Salakênor) ruled over the Veṅgī region as early as the time of Ptolemy (c. 140 A D.).

We have already said above that the seals of the Śālaṅkāyana kings bear the figure of a bull which is probably to be identified with Nandin. This fact and names like Nandivarman (one whose protector is Nandin) and Skandavarman (one whose protector is Skanda, son of Śiva) in the family possibly show that the family religion of the Śālaṅkāyanas was Śaivism. It must also be noticed that all the Śālaṅkāyana kings, in their inscriptions, call themselves Bhagavac-citrarathasvāmi-pād-ānudhyāta, i.e., favoured by the feet of Lord Citrarathasvāmin. Citrarathasvāmin is evidently the name of the family deity of the Śālaṅkāyana Mahārājas of Veṅgī which, as already noticed, has been identified with the village of Peddavegi near Ellore in the Godavari district. In this connection we must notice what Hultzsch said (Ep. Ind., IX, p. 51): “The correctness of this identification is confirmed by the existence of a mound which on a visit to Pedda-Vegi in 1902 was shown to me by the villagers as the site of the ancient temple of Citrarathasvāmin, the family deity of the Śālaṅkāyana Mahārājas.”

The word Citraratha according to Sanskrit lexicons means the Sun. K. V. Lakshmana Rao therefore suggested that Citrarathasvāmin mentioned in the Sālankāyana inscriptions was the Sun-god. It however appears to me that, as the family religion of the Sālankāyanas was in all probability Śaivism, Citrarathasvāmin might possibly be a form of Lord Śiva.

It must be noticed here that while in the inscriptions king Devavarman has been called parama-māhessara, king Nandivarman II is called parama-bhāgavata. K. V. Lakshmana Rao, who believes that the religion of the Sālankāyanas was Śaivism, says (Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., V, p. 25) : “ Because this epithet (scil. parama-māheśvara) was changed into that of parama-bhāgavata by the successors of this king (scil. Devavarman), we need not infer that the later Sālankāyanas changed their Śaiva faith and became Vaiṣṇavas. Bhāgavata did not necessarily mean in those days a worshipper of Viṣṇu, and the followers of Śiva also were called Bhāgavatas. We have the authority of the venerable Patañjali (on Pāṇini V. 2. 1) for the usage of the word Śiva-Bhāgavata.”

It is difficult to agree with Lakshmana Rao. In all the three inscriptions of Nandivarman II, the king is unanimously called parama-bhāgavata, which in its general sense suggests that the king was a devotee of Bhagavān Viṣṇu. It must be noticed that no other Sālankāyana king is as yet known to have used this epithet. Moreover, we know from the Peddavegi plates that Nandivarman II granted no less than 32 nivartanas of land (95·2 acres according to Kauṭilya whose nivartana = 2·975 acres; but 23·4 acres according to a Commentator whose nivartana = ·743 acre ; see infra) in order to make a devahala for the god Viṣṇugrha-svāmin, the lord of the three worlds. This devahala was cultivated by the local brajapālakas and the produce was evidently received by the authorities of the Viṣṇu-grha (temple of Viṣṇu). The word devahala appears to mean “ ploughable lands, dedicated for the enjoyment of a god '' Cf. vraja-pālakānāṃ kraṣṭum devahalaṅ=kṛtvā; see below, pp. 94-95. This Viṣṇu-gr̥hasvāmin (literally, lord of the temple of Viṣṇu) was evidently a form (vigraha) of Lord Viṣṇu. Dedication of lands in honour of Viṣṇugr̥hasvāmin and the epithet parama-bhāga-vata together leave hardly any doubt that the Śālaṅkāyana king Nandivarman II was a Vaiṣṇava.

DEVAVAMMA (=DEVAVARMAN).

In the Ellore grant, the Śālaṅkāyana king Devavarman has been called a devotee of Maheśvara. He is also credited with the performance of an aśvamedha sacrifice (assamedha-yājī). He therefore seems to have been a prince of considerable importance. The performance of the Aśvamedha by Devavarman Śālaṅkāyana seems to speak of his success against the Pallavas who are known to have obtained possession of Andhrāpatha with its head-quarters at Dhaṁṇakaḍa.

In this connection it is necessary to discuss the view of K. V. Lakshmana Rao (Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., V, p. 24), who thus remarked on the epithet aśvamedha-yājī (performer of the horse-sacrifice) applied to Śālaṅkāyana Devavarman in the Ellore Prakrit plates: "I am of opinion that the boast of Aśvamedha (horse-sacrifice) started with the Imperial Guptas, and the contagion spread to the minor dynasties like the Chedis (?Traikūṭakas), the Vākāṭakas, the Kadambas, the Śālaṅkāyanas and others. The proximity in the time of Vijaya Devavarman to Samudra Gupta's South Indian triumphal march, in my opinion explains the insertion of the word assamedha-yājīnā (l.5) in the grant of Vijaya Deva. He must have seen some of the Imperial grants with similar titles and coolly imitated them." My theory, however, is exactly opposite to what has been propounded by Lakshmana Rao.

The first point to notice here is that there is no reference to any titles like aśvamedha-yājī in the Gupta records. If, however, we take that the epithet of Devavarman is an imitation of cir-otsann-āśvamedh-āhartā found in the Gupta inscriptions, we are to think that the Śālaṅkāyana king lived to see the records of Samudragupta's successors, because we do not get the epithet in his own inscriptions.

But we have already shown that this Śālaṅkāyana Devavarman is probably earlier than Samudragupta's contemporary Hastivarman of Veṅgī and, therefore, ruled before the Gupta emperor's southern expedition. As king Devavarman appears to have ruled in the first half of the 4th century A.D.,¹ it may be that the idea of performing the horse-sacrifice was borrowed not by the Śālaṅkāyanas from the Guptas, but by the Guptas from the Śālaṅkāyanas.

Whatever the value of this suggestion may be, I have no doubt that Samudragupta got the inspiration of performing the āśvamedha from his connection with Southern India which may rightly be called the land of Vedic customs. Even at the present time, South India represents Vedic rituals more truly and fanatically than Northern India. So we may think it was also in ancient times. In comparison with the number and variety of Vedic sacrifices performed by early South Indian rulers, like the Sātavāhana king² referred to in the Nanaghat inscription No. 1 (Arch. Surv. W. Ind., V, p. 60 ff.), the Ikṣvāku king Vāsiṣṭhīputra Cāṃtamūla I, the Vākāṭaka king Pravarasena I and the Pallava king Śivaskandavarman,³ the one āśvamedha performed by Gājāyana-Sarvatāta (c. 250 B.C. ; Ind. Hist. Quart., IX, p. 795), the two by Puṣyamitra (Ep. Ind., XX, p. 57) and the two¹ performed by the Gupta kings Samudragupta and Kumāragupta I, are ridiculously insignificant. So, the South might well have been teacher of the North in this respect.

² This Sātavāhana king who has been taken to be the same as Śātakarṇi, husband of Nāganikā, must have ruled before the Christian era.

By the bye it may be said that the view of Lakshmana Rao with reference to the āsvamedha of the Vākāṭakas is also untenable. The Vākāṭakas do not appear to have been inspired by the example set by Samudragupta. The Vākāṭaka king Pravarasena I who claims to have performed four āsvamedhas, along with agniṣṭoma, āptoryāma, ukthya, ṣoḍaśī, atirātra, bṛhaspatisava and sādyaskra (Corp. Ins. Ind., III, p. 97), appears to be earlier than Samudragupta. We know that Prabhāvatīguptā, granddaughter of Samudragupta, was given in marriage to the Vākāṭaka king Rudrasena II, who was grandson's grandson of Pravarasena I. A chronological chart is given for easy reference.

succeeded the Sātavāhanas about the end of the first quarter of the third century, Śiṣakendavarman can hardly be placed earlier than A D. 300; but he seems to have ruled before Kāñceyaka Viṣṇugopa who came in conflict with Samudragupta about the middle of the 4th century See below

It therefore appears that Rudrasena I Vākātaka was a contemporary of Samudragupta's father Candragupta I who began to reign in 320 A.D.¹ It is not impossible that the beginning of the reign of Pravarasena I, grandfather of Rudrasena I, fell in the ninth or tenth decade of the 3rd century A.D. So, if any was the borrower, it was the Guptas, and not the Vākātakas. Pravarasena I could, however, have got the inspiration from his relatives, the Bhāraśivas, who have been credited with the performance of ten āśvamedha sacrifices.²

records The Gupta kings after Samudragupta cannot be called reserved with reference to boasts As has been noticed by Prof Raychaudhuri (Pol Hist Anc Ind, 3rd ed., p. 314), even the epithet cu-otsann-āśvamedh-āhartā, applied by them to Samudragupta, is an exaggeration Secondly, there appear to be some mistakes in the grants of Prabhāvatī (J A S B, N S, XX, p. 58; Ep Ind., XV, p. 41) Here Ghatotkaca has been called the ādī-rāja (first king) of the Gupta family, while the official Gupta records begin the line from Mahārāja Gupta. The passage gupt-ādī-rāja-mahārāja-īrī-ghatotkaca (Ep Ind., XV, p. 41) has, however, been translated by Messrs Pathak and Dikshit as "Ghatotkaca who had Gupta as the first" That the word gupt-ādī-rāja is an instance of the ṣaṣṭhī-tatpuruṣa compound, and not of the Bahuvrīhi, is clear from the Riddhapur plates (J A S B., N S, XX, p. 58), where we have guptānām-ādīrāja, which only means "the first king of the Guptas" Thirdly, in these inscriptions, Candragupta I has the simple title Mahārāja, while in the records of his successors he is always styled Mahārāja;ādhirāja; even Samudragupta is called Mahārāja in the Riddhapur plates. Fourthly, some attributes such as sarva-rāj-occettā, applied to Samudragupta in the Gupta records are here applied to Candragupta II. These appear to prove that references to the Guptas in the Vākātaka records were not very carefully drawn

Moreover, as has been noticed by Andrzej Gawronski (Festschrift, Ernest Windisch, 1914, p. 170) and Divekar (Ann Bhand. Or. Res Ins, VII pp 164-65). Samudragupta performed the āśvamedha late in life, i.e., after the engraving of the Allahabad pillar inscription which does not make mention of any such sacrifice It is, therefore, doubtful whether Samudragupta had time to perform aneka āśvamedha

¹ "The first year of the Gupta era which continued in use for several centuries, and in countries widely separated, ran from February 26, A D 320, to March 13, 321; of which dates the former may be taken as that of the coronation of Chandragupta I" (Smith, E Hist. Ind., 4th ed., p. 296) Recently attempts have been made by several scholars to prove that the Gupta era started in A.D 200, 272 or B.C. 57 The theories are however not convincing. See Ind Cult, III, p. 47 ff

² Corp. Ins. Ind, III, p. 96 That this Pravarasena I was earlier than Samudragupta can also be proved from the evidence of the Purānas The Purānas which do not mention any Gupta king by name and which limit Gupta rule within the area—anugamgaṃ prayāgañ=ca sāketa-magadhāms=tathā (Vāyu, ch. 99,

The Ellore plates, dated on the 10th day of the dark fortnight of Pausa in the 13th year of Devavarman and issued from Veṅgīpura, record the gift of 20 nivartanas of land in Eljura (Ellore in the Godavari district) to the Brāhmaṇa Gaṇaśarman of the Babhura (Babhru) gotra. The Brāhmaṇa was also given a house-site for himself and others for his addhiya-manussas ("men who receive half the crop;" addhikā of the Hirahadagallī grant; Sanskrit ārddhika; cf. Mitākṣarā on Yājñavalkya, I, 166) and dvārgas (doorkeepers). He was exempted from all taxes, and protection of the immunities was ordered by the king.

The exact meaning of Muluḍa in the passage eḷure muḷuḍa-pamukhā gāmo bhānitavvo (villagers of Eljura headed by Muluḍa should be informed) is not clear. The same word evidently occurs in some other Śāṅkayana inscriptions, where it has been differently read as mutyada, munuḍa, etc. The word, which seems to be mutuda or mutuḍa on some plates, possibly means "the head of a village." Fleet's interpretation of mutyada (Ind. Ant., V. p. 176) as "ministers and others" (mantri + ādi) is certainly untenable.

The seal of king Devavarman attached to the Ellore plates is, according to Hultzsch, "all but obliterated; but a faint trace of some quadruped—perhaps a tiger—can be seen" (Ep. Ind., IX. p. 57). The figure is, in all probability, that of a bull, which is found on the seals of the other two Śāṅkayana kings.

HASTIVARMAN, NANDIVARMAN I AND CANDAVARMAN.

As we have seen, the names of the Śālaṅkāyana kings Hastivarman and Nandivarman I are found only in the Peddavegi plates of Nandivarman II. The name of Caṇḍavarman is found in the Peddavegi and Kollair plates. Since we have no grants issued by any of these three kings, very little is so far known about them.

In the Peddavegi plates Mahārāja Hastivarman is called aneka-samar-āvāpta-vijaya (one who attained victory in many battles). It may be noticed here that the Allahabad pillar inscription, which refers to the conflict between Samudragupta and king Hastivarman of Veṅgī, speaks of the different natures of the North Indian and South Indian expeditions of the Gupta monarch. While he is said to have “uprooted” the kings of Āryāvarta, he is said to have followed a policy of “capture and liberation” with regard to the kings of Dakṣiṇāpatha. It is therefore certain that the Gupta emperor was not so lucky as regards his southern expedition, and it may not be impossible that the reference to the victory in aneka-samara of the Śālaṅkāyana king includes also his samara with Samudragupta.

The epithet pratāp-opanata-sāmanta applied to king Caṇḍavarman may suggest that he was not quite a petty chief and that some subordinate rulers acknowledged his suzerainty.

VI

NANDIVARMAN II.

The Śālan-kāyana king Caṇḍavarman was succeeded on the throne by his eldest son (sūnur=jyaṣṭha) Nandivarman II. As we have seen, this king has been called paramabhāgavata in all his inscriptions. Evidently he was a Vaiṣṇava and gave up the traditional Śaivism of the Śālan-kāyana kings.

Three copper-plate grants of this king have so far been discovered. They were all issued from Veṅgīpura.

I. The Kanteru plates (Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., V. p. 21) record a notice of the king to the Mutuda and the villagers of Kuruvāḍa¹ in the Kudrāhāra-viṣaya. It is notified hereby that twelve nivartanas of land in the said village were granted, for the increase of the king's dharma, yaśaḥ, kula and gotra, to a Brāhmana named Svāmidatta who belonged to the Maudgalya gotra.

The Kudrāhāra-viṣaya, which is possibly the same as Kudūrahāra of the Kondamudī plates of Jayavarman, has been identified, as we have said above, with "the country adjoining the modern town of Masulipatam (Bandar)" (Anc. Hist. Dec., p. 85). This region was formerly occupied by the Brhatphalāyanas.

The seal attached to the Kanteru plates has, in relief, the figure of a bull in couching position (Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., V, p. 21).

II. The Kollair plates (Ind. Ant., V, p. 176), issued on the 8th day of the dark fortnight of Pauṣa in the 7th regnal year, record another notice of the king to the

Mutuda and villagers of Videnūrapallikā-grāma, situated in the same Kudrāhāra-viṣaya (Ep. Ind., IX. p. 58 n). The village is hereby granted to 157 Brāhmanas of different gotras, who were then resident at the agrahāra of Kuravaka-Śrīvara. The village was to be treated with immunities from all taxations, and the immunities were to be preserved by the deśādhipatis, āyuktakas, vallabhas and rāja-puruṣas. This inscription is important as it furnishes us with a sidelight into the Śālaṅkāyana administrative system. From the official designations mentioned with reference to the protection of the parihāras, it appears that the Śālaṅkāyana kingdom was divided into several deśas (provinces), which were governed by the deśādhipatis. Āyuktas are mentioned in the Allahabad pillar inscription of Samudragupta as "restoring the wealth of the various kings, conquered by the strength of his arm" (Corp. Ins. Ind., III. p. 14). An āyukta is mentioned as a viṣayapati (head of a province or district) in an inscription of Budhagupta (Ep. Ind., XV. p. 138). According to the lexicographer Hemacandra an āyukta is the same as the niyogin, karmasaciva (cf. karmasaciva-matisaciva ; Ep. Ind., VIII. p. 44) and vyāpṛta. We know from the Kondamudi plates (above, p. 42) that a vyāpṛta was in charge of an āhāra (district). It therefore seems that the term āyukta also signifies ruler of a district. The term vallabha, according to Amara, means adhyakṣa, which has been explained by the commentator as gav-ādhyakṣa (see Śabda-kalpadruma, s.v.). Vallabha therefore appears to be the same as go-'dhyakṣa (superintendent of cows) mentioned in Kauṭilya's Arthaśāstra.¹ The rāja-puruṣas (royal agents) are also found

mentioned in the Arthasāstra (see Samasastry's ed., pp. 59, 75). They appear to be the same as the pulisas of the inscriptions of Aśoka (e.g., in Separate Kalinga R.E. No. 1).

The ājñapti or executor of the grant was the Bhojaka of Mulaku.¹ The term bhojaka (lit. enjoyer) has been taken to mean "free-holder." The Bhojokas appear to have been like the Jāgīrdārs of the Muslim period. Bhoja, according to the Mahābhārata, means persons who were not entitled to use the title "king" (Arājā bhoja-sābdam tvam tatra prāpsyasi sāvayah; Ādi., 84, 22). According to the Aitareya-Brāhmaṇa (VII, 32; VIII, 6, 12, 14, 16-17), bhoja was the title of South Indian kings. The term bhojaka, in a degraded sense, may therefore, mean a jāgīrdār or a protected chief. In some inscriptions, the Bhojakas are mentioned along with the Rāṣṭrikas (probably the same as the Deśādhipatis), e.g., raṭhika-bhojaka in the Hatihgumpha inscription of Khāravela.

III. The Peddavegi plates (Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., I. p. 92) issued on the first day of the bright fortnight of Śrāvaṇa in the 10th year of the reign of king Nandivarman II, eldest son of Caṇḍavarman, grandson of Nandivarman I, and great-grandson of Hastivarman, record a notice of the king to the mutuda (or mutuḍa) and the villagers of Prālura-grāma. The king is said to have hereby granted a deva-hala to Viṣṇu-gr̥ha-svāmin, lord of the three worlds. Deva-hala is evidently the same as devabhoga-hala of the passage devabhogahala-varjjam, which is so common in the Pallava grants and has been translated vallava in the Hirahadagalli grant? Curiously enough, the word vallabha according to the lexicographer Jātādhara is a synonym of aśva-rakṣa, i.e., keeper of horses. The passage vallava (= vallabha of Jātādhara-govallava of the Hirahadagalli grant) therefore appears to mean "the Keepers of horses and the Keepers of cows." See below.

by Hultzsch as “ with the exception of cultivated lands enjoyed by temples ” (Ep. Ind., VIII, p. 165). Fleet translated (Ind. Ant , V, p. 157 and note) the same passage as “ with the exception of the plough of the possession of the god,” and remarked, “ The meaning would seem to be that the grant did not carry with it the right to some cultivated land in the same village which had already been given to the village-god.” A similar word is bhikkhu-hala (bhikkṣu-hala, i.e., cultivated land offered to the Buddhist monks) which occurs in the Nasik cave inscription No. 3 and a Karle cave inscription, and has been ably explained by Senart (Ep. Ind., VII, p. 66). These technical words signified religious donations along with certain privileges (parihāras). The deva-hala granted by Nandivarman II was to be cultivated by the vraja-pālakas (herdsmen) and comprised 10 nivartanas of land at Aṛuṭora, 10 nivartanas at Muṇḍūra-grāma, 6 nivartanas at Ceñceruva-grāma and 6 nivartanas at Kamburāñceruva. Muṇḍūra and Kamburāñceruva have been identified respectively with Muṇḍūru and Kommera in the Ellore taluka of the Kistna district. Ceñceruva is probably the same as Cincināḍa in the Nārasapura taluka and Aṛuṭora may be identified with Allidoḍḍhi in the Gudivāda taluka of the same district (An. Rep. S. Ind. Ep., 1926-27, p. 74).

The deśādhipatis, āyuktakas, vallabhas and rājapuruṣas were ordered to protect the grant. The executor of the grant was the Bhojaka of Mulakūra, possibly the same as that of the Kollair plates. The grant was written by a rahasyādhikṛta (Privy Councillor ; cf. mati-saciva of the Junagadh inscription of Rudradāman ; Ep. Ind., VIII, p. 44 ff., line 17), whose name was Kāṭikūri.

VII

SKANDAVARMAN.

Only one inscription of king Skandavarman has so far been discovered. It is the Kanteru grant, issued from Veṅgī and dated on the full-moon day of Vaiśākha in the 1st year of the king's reign. It records a royal notice to the villagers of Kuḍuhāra-Cinnapura.¹ It is hereby declared that the said village was granted to Śivārya of the Maudgalya gotra, a resident of Lekumāri-grāma. This grama has been identified with Lokamudi in the Kaikalur taluka of the Kistna district.² All the officers including the āyuktakas and the viṣayapatis were ordered to make it immune from all taxations (sarva-niyoga-niyukt-āyo(yu)ktaka-viṣayapatimiśraiḥ sā pallikā parihartavyā). The mention of the viṣayapati in this connection possibly shows that the deśas or provinces of the Śālaṅkāyana kingdom were further subdivided into viṣayas (districts), each of which was under a viṣayapati. The āyuktakas appear to have ruled the subdivisions (āhāras ?) of the viṣayas.

We do not definitely know whether Kuḍuhāra is the same as Kudrāhāra and whether Kuḍuhāra-Cinnapura means "Cinnapura in Kuḍuhāra." Cinnapura has been identified with the present village of Cinnapuram in the Bandar taluka (Journ Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., V, pp. 25-26).

According to Lakshmana Rao there is the figure of a bull on the seal of Skandavarman, attached to the Kanteru plates.

GENEALOGY OF THE VIṢṆUKUṆḌINS.¹

The history of the Viṣṇukunḍins has been touched by scholars like Kielhorn, Hultsch and many others. The author of the present work holds an altogether different view as regards the genealogy and chronology of the dynasty. The question of genealogy shall be discussed in the present and that of chronology in the next section.

The first known inscription of the Viṣṇukunḍins is the Chikkulla plates edited by Kielhorn in Ep. Ind., IV, p. 193 ff. These plates give us the following line of kings :—

1. Mahārāja Mādhavarman ; his son
2. Vikramendravarman (I) ; his son
3. Mahārāja Indrabhaṭṭarakavarman ; his eldest son
4. Mahārāja Vikramendravarman (II) ; (10th year).

Then come the Ramatirtham plates, edited by Hultsch in Ep. Ind., XII, p. 133 ff. Here we have the following line :—

1. Mahārāja Mādhavarman ; his son
2. Rājā Vikramendra ; his son
3. Rājā Indrarvarman ; (27th year).

There can hardly be any doubt that Rājā Indrarvarman of the Ramatirtham plates is identical with Mahārāja Indrabhaṭṭarakavarman of the Chikkulla plates.

¹ My paper on the Viṣṇukunḍin genealogy was originally published in Ind. Hist. Quart., IX, p. 273 ff.

Next we have two sets of copper-plate grants belonging to this dynasty, which were found at a place called Ipur in the Tenali taluka of the Guntur district. They were edited by Hultzsch in Ep. Ind., XVII. In the first set of these plates (ibid, p. 334), we have the following line :—

1. Mahārāja Govindavarman ; his son
2. Mahārāja Mādhavavarman (37th year) ; his son
3. Mañcyanna-bhaṭṭāraka.

Hultzsch, on grounds of palaeography, identified Mādhavavarman of the first set of the Ipur plates with the king of the same name in the Ramatirtham and Chikkulla plates. It can be easily shown that later writers, who have disapproved of this identification as unwarranted, are themselves wrong. The epithets applied to the name of this king, as found in the Chikkulla, Ramatirtham and Ipur (set I) plates, clearly establish the identity. Let us here quote the corresponding passages of the three inscriptions.

1. Chikkulla plates :— Ekādaś-āśvamedh-āvabhṛta(th)-āvadhauta-jagad(t)-kalmaṣasya kratu-sahasra-yājina[h] sarva-medh-āvāpta-sarvabhūta-svārājyasya bahusuvārṇa-paundarīka-puruṣamedha - vājapeya-yu d h y a-ṣ o ḍ a ś i-rājasūya - prā-dhirājya -[prā]jāpaty-ādy-aneka-vividha-prthu-guru-vara-śata-sahasra-yājina[*h] kratuvar-ānuṣṭhāt-ādhiṣṭhā-pratiṣṭhita-paramesthitvasya mahārājasya sakala-jagan-maṇḍala-vimala-guru-pri(pṛ)thu-kṣitipati-makuṭa-maṇi-ga[na-nī]kar-āvanatapāda-yugalasya mādhaba-varmmaṇa[h].

2. Ramatirtham plates :—Sakala-mahī-maṇḍal-āvanata-sāmanta-makuṭa-maṇi-kiraṇ-āvaliḍha-carana-yugo vikhyāta-yaśaḥ śrīman-mahārāja-mādhavavarmanmā tasy=orjitaśrī-viṣṇukunḍi-pārtthiv-odit-odit-ānvaya-tilaka-[s a m u d b h ū t a i]kādaś-āśvamedh-āvabhṛta(th)-vidhauta-ja g a t-k a l m a ś a -kratu-sahasra-[yā]jinaḥ snāna-puṇyodaka-pavitrikṛta-śirasah.

3. Ipur plates (set I):—Smṛti-mati-bala-satva(ttva)- āśvamedh-āvabhṛtha-vidhūta-jagat-kalmaṣah susti(sthi)rakarmma-mahārāja-śrī-mādhavavarmanmā.*

When we remember the fact that no other Viṣṇukunḍin king is as yet known to have performed a single sacrifice of any kind except the one named Mādhavavarman, and when we note further the unique numbers—ELEVEN āśvamedhas and THOUSAND agniṣṭomas (kratus), testified to by all the above three inscriptions, there remains no doubt as regards the correctness of the identification originally proposed by Hultsch.

The second set of the Ipur plates (Ep. Ind, XVII, p. 334) gives us the following line of kings:—

1. Mahārāja Mādhavavarman (I); his son
2. Devavarman; his son
3. Mādhavavarman (II); (17th ? year).

As regards Mādhavavarman (II), the issuer of this set of the Ipur plates, Hultsch says: "As the alphabet of the inscription seems to be of an earlier type than that of the preceding one (scil. Ipur plates: set I), and as grandsons are frequently named after their grandfather, I consider it not impossible that Mādhavavarman II was the grandfather of Govindavarman's son Mādhavavarman, who would then have to be designated Mādhavavarman III." A consideration of the evidence of the two sets of the Ipur plates render this theory untenable. It is to be noted that Mādhavavarman (I), the grandfather of the issuer of the Ipur plates (set II) is described in that inscription as ekādaś-āśvamedh- āvabhṛth-āvadhūta-jagat-kalnaśasy = āgniṣṭoma-sahasra-yājino = 'neka sāmanta-makuṭa-kūṭa-maṇi-khacita-carana-yugala-kamalasya mahārājasya śrī-mādhavavarmanah. We request our readers to compare this passage with the corresponding passage quoted above from the Ipur plates (set I). Can there be any doubt whatsoever about the identity of this Mādhavavarman (I) with the king of the same name of the Ipur plates (set I), and also of the Chikkulla and the Ramatirtham plates? It is highly improbable that two kings of the same name and dynasty and of the same period performed exactly equal numbers—ELEVEN and THOUSAND—of sacrifices, such as the asvamedha and the agniṣṭoma. We, therefore, think it perfectly justifiable to identify the king named Mādhavavarman, who has been credited with the performance of eleven asvamedhas and thousand agniṣṭomas (kratus) in all the different Viṣṇukundin inscriptions.

Moreover, the theory of Hultzsch that Mādhavavarman (whom he is inclined to designate Mādhavavarman III), son of Govindavarman of the Ipur plates (set I), is the grandson of Mādhavavarman II of the Ipur plates (set II), has now been disproved by the discovery of the Polamuru plates wherein Mādhavavarman, son of Govindavarman, is represented as the grandson of Vikramahendra, and not of a king entitled Mādhavavarman.

The Polamuru plates, edited¹ in the Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., VI, p. 17ff., give us the following line of kings :—

1. Vikramahendra ; his son
2. Govindavarman ; his son
3. Mahārāja Mādhavavarman (40th ? year).

¹ Previously edited by K. V. Lakshmana Rao in Journ. Dept. Let., Calcutta University, Vol. XI, p. 31 ff

That this Mādhavavarman of the Polamuru plates can be no other than the famous performer of eleven aśvamedhas and thousand agniṣṭomas is proved by his significant epithets : — atula - bala - parākr ama - yaśo - dāna - vinaya - sampanno daśaśata-sakala-dharaṇīṭala-narapatir = avasita-vivīdha-divyas = trivaranagara-bhavana-gata-parama-y u v ati-ja n a-vi h a r a ṇa-ratir = anna(na)nya-nṛpatisādhāraṇa-dāna-māna-dayā-dama-dhṛti-mati-kṣānti-śorīy(śa u r y)-a u d ā r y a-gāmbhī(bhī)ryya-prabhṛty-aneka-guṇa-sampaj-janit a - r a y ā-samutthita-bhūmaṇḍala-vyāpi-vipula-yaśoḥ(°śāḥ) *kratu-sahasra-yājñi hiraṇyagarbha-prasūta(h) ekādaś-aśvamedh-āvabhṛtha-snāna-vigata-jagad-enaskah sarvabhūta-parirakṣaṇa-cuñcuḥ(r =) vidva[*d]dviya-guru-vṛddha-tapasvijan-āśrayo mahārāja-śrī-mādhavavarmā.*¹

It appears, however, that Mādhavavarman and Govindavarman have respectively been called Janāśraya and Vikramāśraya in this inscription, and it may be argued that they are not identical with the kings of the same names of the Ipur plates (set I). But this doubt is unjustifiable in view of the fact that Mādhavavarman of the Polamuru plates is not only called son of Govindavarman and credited with the performance of eleven aśvamedhas and thousand agniṣṭomas, but is also called hiraṇyagarbha-prasūta and trivaranagara-bhavana-gata-parama-yuvati-jana-viharaṇa - r a t i (t r i v a r a - n a g a r a - b h a v a n a - g a t a - y u v a t i - h ṛ d a y a - n a n d a n a in the Ipur plates), which epithets we find only in his own Ipur plates (set I). There can therefore be no doubt that the Ipur plates (set I) and the Polamuru plates were issued by one and the same person.

In this connection, we must notice the view of some

scholars,¹ who have identified Mādhavavarman II of the Ipur plates (set II), with the king of the same name of the Chikkulla and Ramatirtham plates, and Vikramahendra of the Polamuru plates with Vikramendravarman II of the Chikkulla plates. We have noticed that only one king of the Viṣṇukuṇḍin family may be believed to have performed sacrifices, and, though there seems to be a little exaggeration in the inscription of one of his successors, in all the inscriptions of the dynasty, that king—Mādhavavarman (I), son of Govindavarman and father of Devavarman and Vikramendravarman I—has been credited with the performance of ELEVEN aśvamedhas and THOUSAND agniṣṭomas (kratus). As is also noted above, we think it almost impossible that there can be more than one Mādhavavarman, performer of eleven aśvamedhas and thousand agniṣṭomas, in the same family and the same period. But if we accept the above identifications we have three Mādhavavarmans—I, II and III—all of whom were performers of eleven aśvamedhas and thousand agniṣṭomas!² Moreover, the identification of Mādhavavarman II of the Ipur plates (set II), with

1. Mādhava I, c. A. D. 357-382.
2. Devavarma, c. 382-407.
3. Mādhava II, c. 407-444. (Ipur grant No. 2)
4. Vikramendra I, c. 444-469.
5. Indrabhaṭṭāraka, c. 469-496. (Ramatirtham grant)
6. Vikramendra II, c. 496-521. (Chikkulla grant)
7. Govinda, c. 521-546.
8. Mādhava III, 'Janāśraya,' 546—(?) 610. (Polamuru grant and Ipur grant No. 1)
9. Maṇḍana-bhaṭṭāraka (?) (10— ?)

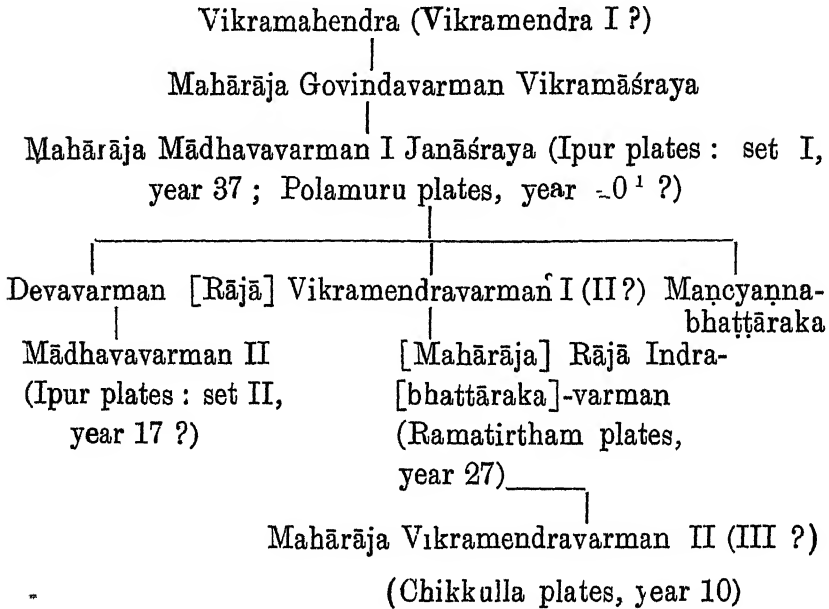

The absurd nature of this chronology is proved by the fact that about the middle of the 4th century not the Viṣṇukuṇḍins but the Śālabhāyanas were ruling over the Veṅḡ region. See my note in Quart. Journ. Myth. Soc., XXV, pp. 299-301 his namesake of the Chikkulla and Ramatirtham plates is, in my opinion, next to impossible. In the Chikkulla and Ramatirtham plates, we have the significant epithets of the great Mādhavavarman, crediting him with the performance of eleven aśvamedhas and thousand agniṣṭomas; but these epithets are conspicuous by their absence in the Ipur plates (set II) in connection with the name of Mādhavavarman II. The date of the plates, which is not fully legible but which appears to me to be year 17, has been read by Hultzsch as the 47th year of the king. Is it possible that a king, who performed among other sacrifices eleven aśvamedhas and thousand agniṣṭomas, did not perform a single one of them before the 47th (if my reading is correct, 17th) year of his reign or forgot to refer to such glorious performances in his own inscription? It may also be significant that Mādhavavarman II has no royal title even in his own Ipur plates (set II). Moreover, the identification becomes utterly untenable when we notice that those significant epithets regarding the performance of 11 aśvamedhas and 1,000 agniṣṭomas have been attached in this inscription to the name of his grandfather Mādhavavarman I. We therefore hold that there were only two, and not three, Madhavavarman among the known kings of the Viṣṇukuṇḍin family and that the first of them, who was the grandfather of the second, performed a good many sacrifices including eleven aśvamedhas and thousand agniṣṭomas.

As regards the second identification, nothing need be said after our identification of Mādhavavarman I, the great performer of sacrifices. But it must be noticed that the name is written in the inscription as Vikramahendra which may be the engraver's mistake for Vikramamahendra. If, however, we take it as a slip for Vikramendra, the king should be designated Vikramendra I, there being two other Vikramendras in the family.

The following is the genealogical arrangement of the Viṣṇukūṇḍin princes according to our theory :—

¹ There is only one numerical symbol on the plate. In Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., VI (p. 17 ff, line 41), it has been deciphered as 48. It looks like a ligature of the symbol for 40 and that for 8, but as far as I know, there was no method known in ancient India by which a number like 48 could be expressed by one numerical symbol only. The symbol possibly signifies 40 (or 70 ?). It may however also be suggested that 8 was put below 40 for want of space to the right of the latter.

II

CHRONOLOGY OF THE VIṢṆUKUNḌINS.¹

We have already dealt with the genealogy of the Viṣṇukunḍin kings. Here we shall discuss the order of succession of the kings of this family and the period to which they are to be assigned.

The first known king of the dynasty is, as we have seen, Vikramahendra. Though he has been given no royal title in the Polamuru grant of his grandson Mādhavavarman I, his epithets viṣṇukunḍinām = apratihata-sāsana and sva-pratāp-opanata-sāmanta-manujapati-maṇḍala seem to prove that he was a king and had some feudatories under him. His son Govindavarman Vikramāśraya has been called Mahārāja in the Ipur plates (set I) of his son Mādhavavarman I.

Mādhavavarman I Janāśraya, the greatest of the Viṣṇukunḍin kings, appears to have had at least three sons, viz., Devavarman, Mañcyanna-bhaṭṭāraka,² and Vikramendravarman I (born of a Vākāṭa, i e., Vākāṭaka princess). Of these we know almost nothing about Mañcyanna. Of the other two, viz., Devavarman and Vikramendravarman I, it is known that their sons became kings. We have the Ipur plates (set II) of Devavarman's son Mādhavavarman II (see infra) and the Ramatirtham plates of Vikramendravarman (I)'s son Indravarman. Should we then suppose that after the death of Mādhavavarman I the Viṣṇukunḍin kingdom was split up into two divisions, ruled separately by his two sons, Devavarman and Vikramendravarman I ? It however seems to me risky to suggest division of kingdom whenever we find two sons of a king or their descendants ruling. It may not be unreasonable to think that there was no such division of kingdom after the death of Mādhavavarman I.

¹ My paper on the Viṣṇukunḍin chronology was originally published in Ind. Hist. Quart., IX, pp. 957-66.

² Mañcanna as a personal name is known to have been used in the Kanarese country in the 12th century A. D. As Prof. Raychaudhuri points out to me, Mañcanna was the name of a minister of Bijjala or Vijjana, the Kalacurya king of Kalyāṇa (1145-1167 A. D.) This minister was a rival of the king's other minister Basava (Bṛṣabha), the famous founder of the Vīraśaiva or Līṅgāyat sect (J. B. B. R. A. S., VIII, pp. 78, 88, 128; and Bomb. Gaz., I, pt II, p. 47). Among minor instances, we may take Mañcanna, a Brāhmaṇa mentioned as receiving some gifts of land in an inscription of the Yādava king Śiṅghaṇa (1210-1247 A. D.) dated in Śaka samv. 1173 (C. P. No. 4 of 1925-26),

Mādhavavarman I possibly died at a very old age. The date of the Polamuru grant of this king seems to be year 40 or, if K. V. Lakshmana Rao's reading is correct, year 48. It seems, therefore, not impossible that the elder children of Mādhavavarman I died before their father's death. In view of the fact that Devavarman, in the Ipur plates (set II) of his son Mādhavavarman II, has the only epithet kṣatriy-āvaskanda-pravarttit-āpratima-vikhyāta-parākrama, which can by no means suggest his accession to the throne, it appears that this son of Mādhavavarman I did not rule, but predeceased his father. Now, we are to determine whether Mādhavavarman I was succeeded by his son Vikramendravarman I or by his grandson Mādhavavarman II.

According to the Ipur plates (set I), Mādhavavarman I granted the village of Bilembali in the Guddādi-viṣaya to Agniśarman, a Brāhmaṇa of the Vatsa gotra. In the Ipur plates (set II), we notice the grant of a village, the name of which seems to me to be Murotukaliki, by Mādhavavarman II to two Brāhmaṇas named Agniśarman and Indraśarman. It is not impossible that Agniśarman of the first set is identical with his namesake who was one of the two recipients of the second set of the Ipur plates. In view of the above fact and also the fact that Devavarman, who seems to have predeceased his father, was possibly an elder brother of Vikramendravarman I, Mādhavavarman II appears to have succeeded his grandfather on the throne (see infra). The date of his Ipur plates (set II) has been read by Hultzsch as [40]7, but he says : "The first figure of the year in the date portion is injured and uncertain" (Ep. Ind., XVII, p. 338). The figure in question, however, seems to be 10 and, consequently, the date may be read as year 17.

Mādhavavarman II was possibly succeeded by his uncle Vikramendravarman I who appears to have been considerably aged at the time of his accession. We have as yet no copper-plate grant issued by this king. The duration of his rule cannot be determined. But if we grant a reign-period of about 25 years to each of the Viṣṇukuṇḍin kings a consideration of the regnal dates of the known kings of the family, seems to suggest not a very long reign-period of this king. "His reign was probably short" (Dubreuil, Anc. Hist. Dec., p. 91).

The succession from Vikramendravarman I to Vikramendravarman II appears to be regularly from father to son. All these kings have royal titles in the inscriptions. We, however, cannot be definite as regards the number of Viṣṇukuṇḍin kings that ruled before Vikramahendra and after Vikramendravarman II.

We have now to consider the time of the Viṣṇukuṇḍin kings. Fortunately for us, the date of Mādhavavarman I can be determined with a certain degree of precision.

The Polamuru plates of Mādhavavarman I record the grant of the village of Pulobūru in the Guddavādi viṣaya by the king in his 40th (or 48th) year as an agrahāra to Śivaśarman, a scholar of the Taittirīya school, belonging to the Gautama gotra, resident of Kuṇḍūra in Karmarāṣṭra, son of Dāmaśarman and grandson of Rudraśarman. Next, we are to notice the contents of the Polamuru plates of the Eastern Calukya king Jayasimha I (Ep. Ind., XIX, p. 254 ff), who began to rule from c. 633 A.D. These plates record the gift of the village of Pulobūmra in the Guddavādi-viṣaya in the 5th year (15th year, according to An. Rep. S. Ind. Ep., 1914, p. 10) of the king's reign to Rudraśarman, a scholar of the Taittirīya school, belonging to the Gautama gotra, resident of Asanapura-sthāna, son of Śivaśarman and grandson of Dāmaśarman. There can be no doubt that Pulobūru of the former inscription is identical with Pulobūmra of the latter, and that the village is to be identified with modern Polamuru (find-spot of both the inscriptions) near the Anaparti Railway station in the Godavari district. There can also be no doubt that Śivaśarman (son of Dāmaśarman), recipient of the grant of Mādhavavarman I, was the father of Rudraśarman (son of Śivaśarman and grandson of Dāmaśarman), the recipient of the grant of Jayasimha I. In the latter grant, Rudraśarman is expressly called pūrv-āgrahārika, "the former owner of the āgrahāra." Now, how many years intervened between the date of the first grant and that of the second, that is to say, between the 40th (or 48th) year of Mādhavavarman I and the 5th year of Jayasimha I?

In considering this question, we are to note the following points. *Āgrahāras*¹ were generally granted to Brāhmanas when they returned from the gurukula after finishing studies, in order to help them in settling themselves as grhasthas. It may therefore be conjectured that Śivaśarman received Polamuru at about the age of 25 or 30² when king

² According to Manu (III, 1-2), a Brahmacārīn should study the Vedas (three Vedas, two Vedas or one Veda) in the gurugṛha for thirty-six years or for half or one-fourth of that period, and should then enter the grhasth-āśrama. The same authority however also says (IX, 94) that a man of thirty years of age should marry a girl of twelve and a man of twenty-four a girl of eight. Kullūka Bhaṭṭa Mādhavavarman was in the 40th (48th according to some) year of his reign. The king thus appears to have been old at the time of granting this agrahāra to the Brāhmaṇa youth. Sivaśarman, however, certainly died before the date of the grant of Jayasimha I. The epithet purv-āgrahārika applied to the name of his son in Jayasimha (I)'s grant possibly goes to show that Rudraśarman, as successor of his father, enjoyed the agrahāra for some time before the 5th year of Jayasimha I, i.e., before c. 637 A. D. The most interesting point in this connection, however, is that Rudraśarman in Jayasimha (I)'s grant is called "resident of the town of Asanapura."¹ He is expected to have resided at Kuṇḍūra in Karmarāṣṭra, the original place of his father or at Polamuru, the agrahāra granted to his father by king Mādhavavarman I. When we remember this change in residence and when we further see that Jayasimha I, at the time of the execution of the Polamuru grant, was stationed in a camp, viṣaya-skandhāvāra, it appears that in the early years of his reign, Jayasimha I led an expedition to the Viṣṇukunḍin country and encamped in the Guddavādi-viṣaya, somewhere near Polamuru; that constant fights were going on between the forces of the Calukyas and those of the Viṣṇukunḍins; and that Rudraśarman, the āgrahārika of Polamuru, had to flee to the town of Asanapura (near Draksharama in the Godavari district) in this troubled period, but came after some time, when Jayasimha I was temporarily or permanently master of the whole of the Guddavādi-viṣaya or a considerable part of it.¹ Considering all these points, I think it not impossible that the difference between the time of the two Polamuru grants was about half a century.²

Vedas at the age of twenty-four.

Then, the 40th (or 48th) year of Mādhavavarman I may be c. 637 A. D. (date of Jayasimha's grant) minus 50, that is, c. 587 A. D. Mādhavavarman I therefore seems to have

¹ The mastery of two different powers over two different parts of one district does not appear to be impossible. The Candras (cf the Rampal grant of Śricandra ; Inscriptions of Bengal, III, No 1) and the Varman (cf Belava grant of Bhojavarman ; ibid, No 3), kings of South-Eastern Bengal granted lands in the Puṇḍrabhukti, which has been presumably taken to be the same as the famous Puṇḍravardhanabhukti. But it seems impossible that the Candras and Varmanas were ever master of the Koṭṭavarṣa or Dinajpur region of the Puṇḍravardhanabhukti. I therefore think that in the age of the later Pālas, the bhukti of Puṇḍravardhana was divided between the kings of Gauḍa and the kings of South-Eastern Bengal. The slight change in the name of the bhukti probably goes to confirm this suggestion.

² The difference between the time of the execution of these two grants may possibly be greater and, consequently, Mādhavavarman I might have ascended the Viṣṇukunḍin throne a little earlier. But I do not want to go far beyond the estimate of Mr Subba Rao who suggests that the period may be about 40 years. This suggestion, however, seems to be invalidated by another suggestion of his. He takes Hastikośa and Virakośa, who were the executors of the grant of Jayasimha I, as personal names. We must notice here that the executors of the grant of Mādhavavarman I were also Hastikośa and Virakośa. If we think that these two persons were officers in charge of the Guddavādi-viṣaya, under Mādhavavarman I and also under Jayasimha I, the intervening period between the grants of the two kings should possibly be shorter than 40 years. We must however note in this connection that there were a Hastikośa and a Virakośa in the Tālupāka-viṣaya, who were ordered by king Prthivīmūla of the Godavari plates (J B B R A S., XVI, p 144 ff.) to protect an agrahāra in the same viṣaya. Fleet, the editor of the Godavari plates, may be right when he says, " I do not know of any other mention of these two officials, who evidently kept the purses and made disbursements on account of respectively the establishment of elephants and heroes who were to be rewarded for deeds of valour " The epithet mahāmātra-yodha applied to Hastikośa-Virakośa in the Polamuru grant of Mādhavavarman I, seems to show that they were Mahāmātra of the Military Department. It may also be that the epithet mahāmātra goes with Hastikośa and yodha with Virakośa. The word mahāmātra, according to Medinī, means hastipak-ādhyakṣa (head of the elephant-drivers or riders ; cf vulgo. māhut). The word yodha generally means " a soldier." Hastikośa and Virakośa have been taken to be " officers in command of the elephant force and the infantry " in An Rep. S. Ind Ep., 1914, p 85.

ruled from about the end of the first half to about the end of the second half of the sixth century.

In connection with the period of Mādhavavarman I, we must also notice the passage of the Polamuru inscription, which records a grant made by the king when he was crossing the river Godāvarī with a view to conquering the eastern region and another passage which refers to a lunar eclipse in the Phālgunī-Purnamāsī (i.e., the full-moon day of the month of Phālguna) as the occasion of the grant. The connection of Mādhavavarman I with the "eastern region" seems to indicate that he was possibly the andhr-ādhipati (lord of the Andhra country) who was defeated by the Maukhari king Īśānavarman according to the Haraha inscription of Vikrama Saṃ 611, i.e., A.D. 544 (vide infra). This synchronism also places Mādhavavarman I Viṣṇukunḍin in the middle of the 6th century A.D.

We have just noticed that the village of Pulobūru was granted on the occasion of a lunar eclipse in the Phālgunī Pūrṇimā. In the second half of the sixth century, lunar eclipses occurred in the above tithi on the following dates :

- (1) 11th February, 556 A. D
- (2) 2nd March, 565 A.D.
- (3) 21st February, 574 A. D.
- (4) 11th February, 575 A. D.
- (5) 21st February, 593 A. D.
- (6) 10th February, 594 A.D.

Of these dates, years 593 and 594 may be tacitly rejected as they appear to be too late. But it is impossible at the present state of our knowledge to ascertain on which of the other four dates the grant was issued. If, however, we presume that the date of the Polamuru grant falls on any of these four dates and if further the reading of the date be accepted as 40, Mādhavavarman I Viṣṇukunḍin certainly began to reign sometime between 516 and 535 A.D.¹ The approximate chronology of the Viṣṇukundin kings, then may be taken as follows :—

1. Rise of the Viṣṇukundin power in the 5th century A.D.²
2. Vikramahendra (Vikramendra I ?) c. 500-520 A.D.
3. Govindavarman c. 520-535 A.D.
4. Mādhavarman I c. 535-585 A.D.
5. Mādhavarman II c. 585-615 A.D.
6. Vikramendravarman I (II ?) c. 615-625 A.D.
7. Indra[bhaṭṭāraka]varman c. 625-655 A.D.
8. Vikramendravarman II (III ?) c. 655-670 A.D.³
9. End of the dynasty possibly about the end of the 7th or somewhere in the 8th century A. D.

The period assigned to Indravarma, viz., circa 625-655 A.D., is, I think, supported by some views expressed by

Fleet in J.B.B.R.A.S., XVI, p. 116. While editing the Godavari plates of Pṛthivīmūla, Fleet said : “ The *Adhirāja*¹ Indra, at whose request the grant was made, is mentioned as having fought in company with other chiefs who united to overthrow a certain Indrabhaṭṭāraka. Taking into consideration the locality (the Godavari district) from which the grant comes, and its approximate period as indicated by the palaeographical standard of the characters and the use of numerical symbols in the date, there can be no doubt that Indrabhaṭṭāraka is the Eastern Chalukya of that name, the younger brother of Jayasimha I.” According to many of the Eastern Calukya grants, however, this Indrabhaṭṭāraka did not reign at all, though some grants assign a reign period of only 7 days to him. It is therefore highly improbable that Indrabhaṭṭāraka of the Godavari grant of Pṛthivīmūla was identical with the Eastern Calukya of that name. Kielhorn rightly suggested that the reference to Indravarman Viṣṇukunḍin’s fights with many caturdantas in the Chikkulla grant supports his identification with Indrabhaṭṭāraka of the Godavari plates (Ep. Ind, IV, p. 195 note). Caturdanta is properly the epithet of Indra’s Airāvata, the elephant of the east. We are therefore justified in accepting the identification of Indrabhaṭṭāraka of the Godavari plates with the Viṣṇukunḍin king Indravarman or Indrabhaṭṭārakavarman.

Fleet further remarked : “And the figurative expression that the Adhirāja Indra, mounted upon the elephant supratika of the north-east quarter, overthrew the elephant kumuda of the south-east or southern quarter, shows that this attack upon the Eastern Chalukyas was made from the north-east of their kingdom of Veṅgī." The inscription of the Gaṅga king Indravarman referred to by Fleet are dated in the 128th and 146th year of the Gaṅga era, which "seems to have commenced in A. D. 496" (Ep. Ind., XX, App., p. 201, n. 1 ; Ind. Ant., LXI, p. 237 f.).¹ The above Gaṅga inscriptions were, therefore, issued in circa 624 and 642 A.D. Consequently, the Gaṅga king Indravarman was a contemporary of the Viṣṇukunḍin Indrabhaṭṭāraka-varman (circa 625-655 A.D.).

As regards the possession of Veṅgī by the Eastern Calukyas in the middle of the seventh century A.D., it may be said that there is no conclusive proof of that supposition. From the Aihole inscription (Ep. Ind., VI, p. 4 ff.), we learn that Pulakeśin II reduced the strong fortress of Piṣṭapura, which is the modern Piṭṭapuram (Piṭhapuram) in the Godavari district, near the sea-coast, about 80 miles to the north-east of Peddavegi; and he caused the leader of the Pallavas to shelter himself behind the ramparts of Kāñcī, modern Conjeeveram about 40 miles to the south-west of Madras. Fleet says: "Probably during the campaign which included the conquest of Piṭṭapuram and which must have taken place at this time (i.e., A.D. 616 or 617), the Veṅgī country was made a part of the Chālukya dominions; and the reference to the Pallavas immediately after the mention of Piṣṭapura, has been understood as indicating that it was from their possession that Veṅgī was taken" (Ind. Ant., XX, p. 94 f.). After the publication of the Viṣṇukunḍin copper-plate grants, however, the theory of the Pallava occupation of Veṅgī in the beginning of the 7th century A.D. may be tacitly given up. Since Lendulūra, for some time the residence (vāsaka) of a Viṣṇukunḍin king, has been undisputedly identified with

Deṇḍalūru, a village on the ruins of the ancient city of Veṅgī, 5 miles north-east of Ellore in the Godavari district, it is certain that the Veṅgī country passed from the hands of the Śālaṅkāyanas to the possession of the Viṣṇukuṇḍins.

It is interesting to notice a passage in the Aihole inscription dated in 634-35 A.D. (Ep. Ind., VI, loc cit.) which describes Pulakeśin (II)'s southern campaign. Verse 28 of that famous inscription speaks of a piece of water, which appears to contain some islands that were occupied by Pulakeśin's forces. This piece of water has been called the Kaunāla water or the water (or lake) of Kunāla. The position of this Kunāla is indicated by the sequence of events recorded in the inscription. Verse 26 tells us that Pulakeśin II subdued the Kalīṅgas and the Kośalas and then, according to the following verse, took the fortress of Piṣṭapura. After that is recorded the occupation of Kunāla (verse 28); this again is followed, in the next verse, by Pulakeśin's victory over the Pallava king near Kāñcīpura. Verse 29 describes the Calukya king as crossing the river Kāveri, after which is described his contact with the Colas, Keralas and the Pāṇḍyas (verse 31). Kielhorn seems therefore perfectly reasonable when he says (ibid, pp. 2-3). "Pulakeśin's march of conquest therefore is from the north to the south, along the east coast of Southern India; and the localities mentioned follow each other in regular succession from the north to the south. This in my opinion shows that 'the water of Kunāla' can only be the well-known Kolleru lake, which is south of Piṭhapuram, between the rivers Godāvarī and Kṛṣṇā. To that lake the description of 'the water of Kunāla' given in the poem would be applicable even at the present day, and we know from other inscriptions that the lake contained at least one fortified island, which more than once has been the object of attack." Since the ruins of Veṅgī and Deṇḍalūru lie in the vicinity of the Kolleru lake there can now hardly be any doubt that the 'water of Kunāla' (i.e., the Kolleru or Kollair lake) was, at the time of Pulakeśin (II)'s invasion, in the possession of the Viṣṇukunḍins and that the battle of Kunāla was fought between the Calukya king and a Viṣṇukunḍin ruler who was most probably either Mādhavavarman II or Vīkramendravarman I, both of whom were weak successors of the great Madhavavarman I.

The theory now generally accepted is that Veṅgī was conquered by Pulakesin II, during his campaign in the south-eastern region. There is, as I have already said, no conclusive evidence in support of this theory. In the records of the early Eastern Calukya kings there is no reference to the occupation of Veṅgī at all. The first use of the name of Veṅgī is in the inscriptions of the time of Amma I (918-925 A.D.) which call Vijayāditya II (c. 794-842 A.D.) veṅg-iśa, and in the inscriptions of the time of Cālukya Bhīma II (934-945 A.D.), which contain the first explicit statement that the territory over which Kubja-Viṣṇuvardhana and his successors ruled was the Veṅgī country (Ind. Ant., XX, p. 94). Both Amma I and Cālukya Bhīma II reigned in the tenth century A.D.; the evidence of their inscriptions as to the Calukya occupation of Veṅgī in the 7th century can, therefore, be reasonably doubted. The fact seems to be that the Viṣṇukunḍins of Veṅgī, from the time of the Calukya possession of Piṣṭapura, became weaker and weaker, and their country was gradually annexed to the waxing empire of the Eastern Calukyas. The formal annexation which took place possibly after the extinction of the Viṣṇukunḍins end of the 7th or (somewhere in the 8th century A.D. ?) seems to have been completed long before the tenth century A.D., i.e., the time of Amma I and Calukya Bhīma II, when the Eastern Calukyas claimed that they were master of the Veṅgī country from the very beginning of their history. There appears therefore no strong grounds against our theory that the Viṣṇukunḍins, though shorn of their past glory, were ruling for sometime at Veṅgī, contemporaneously with the Eastern Calukyas, who ruled first probably from Piṣṭapura,¹ next from Veṅgī² and then from Rājamahendri.³

We have to notice two other points before we conclude this section. Smith in his Early History of India, 4th ed., p. 441, says: "In the east he (scil. Pulakeśin II) made himself master of Vengī, between the Kṛishṇā and the Godāvarī, and established his brother Kubja Viṣṇuvardhana there as viceroy in A.D. 611 with his capital at the stronghold of Piṣṭapura, now Piṭhapuram in the Godavari district." Smith, here, professes to rely on the Koppāram plates of Pulakeśin II, edited by Lakshmana Rao in Ann. Bhand. Or. Res. Inst., IV, p. 43 ff. These plates, which are full of textual mistakes, seem to record

the grant of some lands in Karmarāṣṭra (northern part of Nellore and southern part of Guntur) by one Pṛthivī-Duvarāja in the presence of Pulakeśin II. The grant is dated in the pravardhamāna-vijaya-rājya-samvatsara 21. Hultzsch while editing these plates in Ep. Ind., XVIII, has shown that the inscription belongs to the 21st regnal year of Pulakeśin II, i.e., to about A. D. 629-30 and that Pṛthivī-Duvarāja is to be identified with his younger brother Kubja-Viṣṇuvardhana, who is styled Pṛthivī-vallabha-Viṣṇuvardhana, -Yuvarāja in the Sataṛa grant (Ind. Ant., XIX. p. 309). The word duvarāja is a Dravidian tadbhava of Sanskrit yuvarāja. Cf. Akalankat-tuvarāyar = Sanskrit akalanka-yuvarāja in the Amber ins.; Ep. Ind., IV, p. 180, and Tuvarāśan = yuvarāja in the Kasakudi ins.; S. Ind. Ins., II, No. 73.¹ Lakshmana Rao, however, thought that Duvarāja of this inscription is to be identified with Dhruvarāja of the Goa plates, and that the year 21 of his reign falls in A.D. 611.

But even if we accept 611 A.D. to be the date when Pulakeśin II invaded Karmarāṣṭra and defeated the Viṣṇukunḍin king, does it follow that Pulakeśin II conquered the whole of the kingdom of the Viṣṇukunḍins? Does the defeat of a king always lead to the loss of his entire territory? Pulakeśin II is known to have defeated the Pallava king, penetrated through the whole of the Pallava territory and crossed the Kāverī; but was the Pallava power weakened? Again, in 642 A.D., the Pallava king Narasiṃhavarman defeated and killed Pulakeśin II and took Vātāpi, the Calukya capital; but did the Calukya power permanently collapse? Did not the power of the Calukyas exist even during the period of Rāṣṭrakūṭa usurpation? ¹

Then again according to Bilhana (Vikramāṅkadevacarita, Intro., p. 44; Ind. Ant., V, p. 323) the Calukya emperor Vikramāditya VI of Kalyāṇī marched on and occupied Kāñcī, the capital of the Colas (i.e., the Eastern Calukyas), and amused himself there for sometime before returning to his capital. "It is doubtless this campaign that led to there being so many inscriptions, referring themselves to the reign of Vikramāditya VI, at Draksharama and other places in the Telugu country, outside the ordinary limits of the Western Chalukya kingdom" (Bomb. Gaz., I, pt. II, p. 453, note 1.). But does this fact prove that Kāñcī and the Telugu country were permanently occupied by the Calukyas of Kalyāṇī? Temporary success like this is possibly also shown in the grant of two villages near Talakāḍ, the Gaṅga capital in Mysore, by the Kadamba king Ravivarman (Ep. Ind., VIII, p. 146; Sewell, List, s. v. C. A.D. 500; Moraes, Kadambakula, p. 48).

To commemorate even the temporary occupation of part of a country, Indian kings appear to have used to grant there lands to Brāhmaṇas (see Manusamhitā, VII, verses 201-02), and generally, this sort of grants was acknowledged by other kings who followed the donor in the rule of that locality.² It may, therefore, be not altogether impossible that Pulakeśin II penetrated as far as Karmarāṣṭra, where the reigning Viṣṇukunḍin king was defeated, and the Calukya king felt himself justified in granting lands in the district of which he thought himself to be master for the time being at least.¹

If these suggestions be accepted, there is then no difficulty as regards the discovery of Calukya grants, giving lands in places which were originally under the Viṣṇukunḍins. We however do not argue that all the Eastern Calukya kings who granted lands in the country once occupied by the Viṣṇukunḍins were temporary possessors of the land. It seems reasonable to believe that the Viṣṇukunḍin country gradually, not long after the invasion of Pulakeśin II, merged into the Eastern Calukya empire and gradually the Viṣṇukunḍins lost all their territories excepting the small district round their capital city of Veṅgī. The existence of Viṣṇukunḍin rule at Veṅgī in the 7th century may be compared with that of the Kadamba rule at Vaijayanṭī even in the glorious age of the early Calukyas of Bādāmi.

The next point is regarding the find-spot of the Ramatirtham plates of the Viṣṇukunḍin king Indravarman. The plates were found at a place near Vizianagram in the Vizagapatam district of the Madras Presidency. They record the grant of a village in the Pḷakirāṣṭra, which was evidently situated in the Vizagapatam district (Anc. Hist. Dec., p. 91). On the evidence of the find of these plates, it may be suggested that the Vizianagram region was included in the Viṣṇukunḍin kingdom, that is to say, the Viṣṇukunḍin boundary extended as far as the borders of the Ganjam district.¹ In view of the fact that there were the royal house of Piṣṭapura, the houses of the Varmans of Simhapura, Vardhamānapura, Sunagara, Śrīpura and Sārapallikā and also of the Gaṅgas of Kaliṅganagara whose era probably started from 496 A.D., permanent Viṣṇukuṇḍin occupation of the Vizianagram region seems to be highly improbable. The truth might have been that in retaliation to the raids of Pulakeśin II and Jayasimha I, Indravarman Viṣṇukuṇḍin invaded the Calukya country and penetrated as far as the Pḷakirāṣṭra, where he made grants of land, as did Pulakeśin II in Karmarāṣṭra, Jayasimha I in Guddavādi and Gudrāhāra, and Vikramāditya VI in the Telugu country. The Pḷakirāṣṭra or Vizagapatam district seems to have been under the Eastern Calukyas as early as the 18th year of Viṣṇuvardhana I. His Chipurupalle plates (Ind. Ant., XX, p. 15), dated in that year, were found in the Vizagapatam district. They evidently refer to the Pḷakiviṣaya, doubtfully read as Pūkiviṣaya by Burnell and Fleet. This Pḷakiviṣaya is evidently the same as Pḷakirāṣṭra of the Ramatirtham plates of Indravarman.

We have seen that the Godavari grant of Pṛthivīmūla refers to a coalition of kings against Indrabhattārakavarman, who has been identified with the Viṣṇukuṇḍin king of that name. It seems to me that when Indravarman Viṣṇukuṇḍin defeated the Eastern Calukya forces and penetrated far into their country, Jayasimha I, who seems to have been the Eastern Calukya contemporary of Indravarman, formed an alliance with several other kings, one of whom was Adhirāja Indra, identified by Fleet with the Gaṅga king Indravarman. The combined forces of these allied kings possibly defeated the Viṣṇukunḍin king and compelled him to return and shelter himself behind the ramparts of his capital, the city of Veṅgī.

VIKRAMAHENDRA (VIKRAMENDRA I?) AND GOVINDAVARMAN VIKRAMĀŚRAYA.

As we have already noticed, king Vikramahendra is mentioned only in the Polamuru grant of his grandson Mādhavavarman I. He is there described as favoured by (i.e., as a devotee of) Lord Śrīparvatasvāmin and is said to have subdued the feudatory chiefs by his own valour. The Lord Śrīparvatasvāmin is referred to in all the inscriptions of the Viṣṇukunḍin family and may, therefore, be taken to have been the family-deity of the Viṣṇukunḍins. Śrīparvata may be identified with Śrīsaila in the Kurnool district of the Madras Presidency.¹ The original home of the Viṣṇukunḍin family may, therefore, be supposed to have been not very far from Śrīsaila. Kielhorn (Ep. Ind., IV, 193) suggested a connection of the name of the family with that of the hill-fort and town of Viṇukonḍa in the Kistna district, about 60 miles east of Śrīsaila and 50 miles south of the Krishna river. Viṇukonḍa, according to Kielhorn, was possibly the early home of the Viṣṇukunḍins.

The son and successor of Vikramahendra was Govindavarman. His surname Vikramāśraya and the epithet aneka-samara-saṃghaṭṭa-vijayin possibly show that he was a king of considerable importance. He is said to have been obeyed by all the feudatory chiefs.

¹ Excepting the grant of Mādhavavarman II, which applies the epithet bhagavac-chrīparvatasvāmī-pād-ānudyāta to the name of the issuer himself, all other Viṣṇukunḍin records apply the epithet to the first king (a predecessor of the issuer) with whose name the genealogical part of the inscriptions begin. In the records therefore king Vikramendrarvarman I and his son and grandson are not themselves called 'favoured by (i.e., devotee of) Lord Śrīparvata-svāmin.' The celebrated temple of god Śiva, called Mallikārjuna, is situated on the northern plateau of the Nallamaai hills. Many Western Calukya grants have been found in the Kurnool district which region appears to have passed to the Western Calukyas before the middle of the 7th century.

MĀDHAVAVARMAN I JANĀŚRAYA.

Mādhavavarman I Janāśraya appears to have been the greatest of the Viṣṇukuṇḍin kings.¹ The performance of 11 aśvamedhas, 1,000 agniṣtomas and some other rites including the Hiranyagarbha proves that he was a prince of power and resources. In very early times the aśvamedha was evidently performed by kings desirous of offspring (see Apte, Sanskrit-English Dictionary, s.v. aśva). According to the Rāmāyaṇa (I, viii, 2), king Daśaratha performed this sacrifice for progeny (sut-ārthī vājimedhena kim=artham na yajāmy=aham). Kings are also known to have performed aśvamedha for purifying themselves from sin. According to Viṣṇu, aśvamedhena śudhyanti mahāpātakinas=tv=ime (Śabdakalpādruma-pariśiṣṭa, s. v. aśvamedha). Yudhiṣṭhira in the Mahābhārata (XIV, ii) is said to have performed the horse-sacrifice with a view to purifying himself. But, as we have already noticed, it was performed only by a king who was a conqueror and a king of kings. Keith has rightly pointed out that the Aśvamedha “is an old and famous rite, which kings alone can bring to increase their realms” (Rel. Phil. Ved. Up., p. 343). The Baudhāyaṇa Śr. Sūt. (XV, i) Lakshmana Rao (Journ. Dept. Let., XI, pp. 55-59) refers to several traditions that have grown on the glorious name of Mādhavavarman. A 13th century inscription in the Malleśvarasāmi temple at Bezvāḍa gives an anecdote about Mādhavavarman, king of Bezvāḍa in Śaka 117 (1), who punished his own son with death for killing a poor woman's son. A Bezvāḍa pillar inscription of the 16th century claims for a general of Kṛṣṇadevarāya of Viṣṇanagara descent from Mādhavavarman of Bezvāḍa. A poem called Śrīkṛṣṇavyayam (c. 1340 A.D.) speaks of the migration into Telingana of four Rajput tribes under the leadership of one Mādhavavarman in Śaka 514. This Mādhavavarman is claimed to be the ancestor of the family of the Mahārāṇa of Vizianagram in the Vizagapatam district. The caste called Rāzu or Rāchavār, in the Telugu country also claims Mādhavavarman as progenitor.

Taittirīya Br. (III, 8, 9, 4; V, 4, 12, 3), Āpastamba Śr. Sūt. (XX, I, i) and many other early texts prove beyond doubt that a feudatory ruler could not perform the āśvamedha.¹ A point of great interest, however, is that Mādhavavarman I claims to have performed as many as ELEVEN āśvamedhas, while successful conquerors like Samudragupta and Puṣyamitra are known to have performed only one or two āśvamedhas. Of course, from the description of the sacrifice given in the Rāmāyaṇa and the Mahābhārata, it appears that some āśvamedhic practices of the Vedic age may have been slightly modified in the epic period; but it is impossible to think that it became so easy as to be performed by even a king of the feudatory rank. It must be noticed that some Vedic kings are known to have performed a great number of āśvamedhas. Thus Bharata, son of Duṣyanta, according to a gāthā quoted in the Śatapathabrāhmaṇa (XIII, iii, 5, 11; Weber's edition, p. 994), performed as many as one hundred and thirty-three horse-sacrifices on the banks of the Gaṅgā and the Yamunā (aṣṭāsaptatiṃ bharato dauṣyantir = yamunām = anu gaṅgāyām vṛtraghne = 'badhnāt pañca-pañcāśataṃ hayān = iti). According to another gāthā (loc. cit., 13), Bharata performed more than a thousand āśvamedhas after conquering the whole earth (paraḥsahasrān = indrāy = āśvamedhān = ya = āharad = vijitya pṛthivīm sarvām = iti). The epics and Purāṇas however knew of traditions regarding some early kings trying to perform a hundred āśvamedhas, which would lead the performer to the attainment of the seat of Indra who is, therefore, represented as trying to prevent the hundredth sacrifice (see Vāmana-Purāṇa, Ch. 78; Raghu., III, 38-66; Bhāgavata Purāṇa, IV, 16, 24; 17, 4; etc.). May it be that the Vedic āśvamedha was less pompous than the epic āśvamedha and that the āśvamedhas performed by South Indian kings were of the Vedic type?

We have already noticed that the Deccan performs Vedic rites more fanatically than Northern India. See also my views in Journ. Ind. Hist., XIII, p. 40.

Mādhavavarman I married a girl of the Vākāṭaka family of Northern Deccan, and thus made his power secure in that direction.¹ According to V. A. Smith (J. R. A. S., 1914, p. 137) the Vākāṭaka father-in-law of Mādhavavarman Viṣṇukunḍin was king Hariṣeṇa who claims to have conquered the Andhra and Kalinga countries. It is also believed that Mādhavavarman succeeded in getting the possession of the Veṅgī country by virtue of this Vākāṭaka alliance (Sewell, List., s.v. A. D. 500). This suggestion is however untenable in view of the fact that Mādhavavarman I, though he was the greatest king, was not the first king of his dynasty, he being at least preceded by his father Govindavarman and grandfather Vikramahendra. The Polamuru grant calls him *daśasata-sakala-dharaṇītala-narapati*² and credits him with an expedition for the conquest of the eastern region.

It must be noticed in this connection that, in the Haraha inscription dated A. D. 554, the Maukharī king Īśānavarman claims victory over an Andhr-ādhipati. There can hardly be any doubt that this Andhr-ādhipati was a Viṣṇukunḍin king. Prof. Raychaudhuri (Pol. Hist. Anc. Ind., 2nd ed., p. 370) has taken this Andhra king to be Mādhavavarman of the Polamuru plates who according to this grant “crossed the river Godāvarī with a desire to conquer the eastern region." This identification suits well the chronology we have accepted in these pages. It may not be impossible that the eastern expedition of Mādhavavarman I was undertaken in retaliation to his previous unsuccessful struggle with the Maukharis. This supposition is supported by the fact that a victory over the Andhras is alluded to in the Jaunpur Inscription of Īśvaravarman, father of Īśānavarman Maukharī (Corp. Ins. Ind., III, p. 230).

¹ Dr. D. C. Ganguly writes in Ind. Hist. Quart., VIII, p. 26: “Mādhavavarman I was the founder of this dynasty. His mother was a princess of the Vākāṭaka family.” According to the Chikkulla plates (Ep. Ind., IV, p. 193), however, the Vākāṭaka princess was the mother of Vikramendravarmā I, son of Mādhavavarman I. Cf. Viṣṇukunḍin-vākāṭaka-vamśa-dvay-ālaṅkāṛa-janmanah śrī-vikramendravarmāṇah, etc. As we have shown, Mādhavavarman I was not the founder or the first king of the Viṣṇukunḍin dynasty.

Mr. M. Somasekhara Sarma suggests to me that the epithet may possibly be translated as “lord of the Veṅgī Ten Thousand.”

In the Polamuru grant, Mādhavavarman I has been called avasita-vividha-divya (line 8). This passage has been left out in the translation of Mr. Subba Rao who has edited the inscription in Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., VI, p. 17 ff. The passage, however, appears to me very important in connection with the administration of justice in the Andhra country at the time of the Viṣṇukūṇḍins. Here is a clear evidence of the prevalence of the system of trial by ordeals in the Viṣṇukūṇḍin kingdom. The word divya, here, certainly means "ordeal" and vividha-divya "various (forms of) ordeals." The verb ava-so has, among others, the meanings "to accomplish," "to know" and "to destroy." The passage avasita-vividha-divya may, therefore, mean, one "who has accomplished the various (forms of) ordeals," or "who has known (how to use) the various (forms of) ordeals," or "who has destroyed (i.e., abolished) the various forms of ordeals." We have seen that this Mādhavavarman I Viṣṇukūṇḍin performed eleven Aśvamedhas and a thousand agniṣṭomas (kr atus). It must be noticed in this connection that no one except a fanatic can be expected to perform an aśvamedha sacrifice and expose his wives to such indecent and obnoxious practices as are necessary in the performance of this sacrifice. As for instance, the mahiṣī of the performer of the aśvamedha is required to lie down beside the sacrificial horse and to put the horse's penis into her own private parts (cf. mahiṣī svayam = ev = āśva-śiśnam = akrṣya sva-yonau sthāpayati—Mahīdhara on Śukla-yajus, XXXII, 18-25; and aśvasya śiśnaṃ mahiṣy = upasthe nidhatte : Satapathabrahmaṇa, XIII, iv, 2). Mādhavavarman I, performer of eleven aśvamedhas, thus appears to have been one of the most orthodox Hindu kings of ancient India.¹ It is, therefore, doubtful whether we can expect from him such a great reform as the abolition of the deep-rooted system of trial by ordeals, which is sanctioned by ancient law-givers and which was in use in our country as late as the end of the 18th century and possibly still later.² The last meaning is, therefore, less probable. The divyas or ordeals, which were used in ancient Indian courts in order to ascertain the truth of a statement, has been enumerated as nine in the Divyatattva of Brhaspati. They were ordeal (1) by balance, (2) by fire, (3) by water, (4) by poison, (5) by "image-washed" water, (6) by rice, (7) by the hot māśaka, (8) by spear-head, and (9) by images. Cf.

For details see my paper on the Divyas in Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., VII, p. 195 ff. and Appendix below.

In both the Ipur and Polamuru grants the king is said to have been the delighter of the damsels residing in the houses of Trivaranagara. Trivaranagara appears to mean "the city of king Trivara."¹ A king named Trivara has been mentioned in the Kondedda grant (Ep. Ind., XIX, p. 267) of the Sailodbhava king Dharmarāja, as having formed an alliance with a certain king named Mādhava and fought against Dharmarāja. It is possible that king Trivara of the Kondedda inscription is the same as that mentioned in the grants of Mādhavavarman I Viṣṇukunḍin. Mādhavavarman I however does not appear to have lived at the time of Sailodbhava Dharmarāja and therefore can hardly be identical with Mādhava who fought against the Sailodbhava monarch. A king named Tivara is found in the line of the Pāṇḍavas of Kośala, who had their capital at Śrīpura (see the Rajin and Baloda grants, Corp. Ins. Ind., III, p. 291 ff; Ep. Ind., VII, p. 10 ff.). The charters and seals of Mahāśiva Tivara of Śrīpura are in the box-headed character. According to some scholars, the boxheaded characters were in use in the 5th and 6th centuries of the Christian era (Ind. Hist. Quart., IX, p. 596). Fleet and Kielhorn, however, think that the inscriptions of Tivara of Kośala are not earlier than 700 A.D. (Indische Palaeographie, p. 63, note 20). According to Bühler (ibid., p. 62), the Central Indian or "box-headed" type is found fully developed "in einer Inschrift Samudragupta's aus Eran und einer Chandragupta's II. aus Udayagiri, den kuptertafeln der Könige von Sarabhapura, den Inschriften der Vākātaka; der des Tivara von Kośala und in zwei frühen Kadamba-Inschriften." The Gupta, Vākātaka and Kadamba records are definitely known to be earlier than 700 A.D. The same may be the case with the inscriptions of Tivara of Kośala. It must be noticed in this connection that Fleet's and Kielhorn's view that the Vākāṭaka records date from the 7th century A.D. (ibid, note 19) has now been conclusively disproved.

² Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., VII, p. 195 ff. Trial by ordeals is used to settle up disputes among some aboriginal tribes of the Andhra region even at the present day. Mr. G. T. H. Bracken, Chief Secretary to the Madras Government, in course of his address on "Wilder Parts of India" to the Rotary Club on March 9, 1934, said, "In disputes over land, the custom (in the East Godavari Agency) is to make the parties to the dispute walk round the land, and he who walks the whole way round continually and eats some of the earth is declared to be the owner" (from Report in the Amrita Bazar Patrika, Calcutta). This system of trial was prevalent in the Marāṭhā country even at the time of the Peshwas, that is to say, as late as the 19th century A.D. (see S. N. Sen Administrative History of the Marathas, 2nd ed., p. 368 ff.)

The performance of Vedic sacrifices and the epithet parama-brahmaṇya (highly hospitable to the Brāhmaṇas) clearly show that Mādhavavarman I was a staunch follower of the Brahmanical faith.

I. The Ipur plates (set I) were issued on the 15th day of the 7th fortnight of summer in the 37th year¹ of the king, from the camp of Kuḍavāḍa (viḷaya-skandhāvārāt kuḍavāḍa-vāsakāt). They record a notice to the inhabitants of Vilembali in the Guddādi-viṣaya. The village was granted by the king to a Brāhmaṇa named Agniśarman belonging to the Vatsa gotra, and all royal officers were ordered to protect it and make it immune from taxation. The executor of the grant was the king's beloved son, Prince Maṇyaṇṇa. The village of Vilembali and the Guddādi-viṣaya have not been satisfactorily identified. Guddādi may be the same as Guddavādi-viṣaya, i.e., the present Rāmachandrapur taluka. It is possibly not the same as the Guḍrābhāra-viṣaya which is the district round Gudivāḍa in the Kistna district.

The seal of king Mādhavavarman I attached to the plates is circular and somewhat worn. It is divided by a cross-line into two sections. The lower section bears in relief Śrī-Mādhavavarmā in two lines. Hultzsch thought that the upper section bears the figure of Lakṣmī or svastika on a pedestal, flanked by two lamp-stands and possibly surmounted by the sun and crescent of the moon (Ep. Ind., XVII, p. 334). As on the seals attached to the Chikkulla and Ramatirtham plates the figure of a lion is clearly visible, it may not be impossible that the obliterated part

II. The Polamuru grant¹ was issued by the king when he set out on the eastern expedition and was crossing the Godāvārī. By it the mahattaras and adhikāra-puruṣas were informed that the king made an agrahāra of the village of Pulobūru on the Daliyavāvi river and of four nivartanas of land at the southern extremity of Mayindavā-takī, and granted it to the Gautama gotra Brāhmaṇa Śivaśarman, resident of Kuṇḍūra in Karmarāṣṭra. As Polamuru (Pulobūru of the inscription) is a village in the Ramchandrapur taluka of the Godavari district, the present taluka may be roughly identified with the Guddavādi-viṣaya in which the village is said to have been situated. Mayindavātakī has been identified with Mahendravāḍa adjacent to Polamuru, and Daliyavāvi with the small stream Tulyabhāga now turned into a drainage canal. Kuṇḍūra may be the same as Koṇḍuru in the Sattanepalle tāluka or Peda-Koṇḍuru in the Tanuku taluka of the Guntur district. As we have already seen, the village of Polamuru was re-granted to the recipient's son by the Eastern Calukya king Jayasimha I who probably conquered the region from the Viṣṇukunḍins.

In the Sanskrit lexicon Trikāṇḍaśeṣa, mahattara has been called the same as grāma-kūṭa, "the head of a village" (cf. rāṣṭra-kūṭa "head of a rāṣṭra," an official designation in the Calukya inscriptions). Evidently, affairs in villages were controlled by them. The word adhikāra-puruṣa appears to mean "a puruṣa (agent) having an adhikāra (a post)," i.e., a government official cf. na nisprayojanam = adhikāravantaḥ prabhubhir = āhūyante : Mudrā-rākṣasa, Act III. The mention of the mahattaras along with “government officials” possibly shows that the former were not salaried officers of the government.¹ The executors of the grant were the Hastikośa and Vīrakośa, which terms have already been discussed.

“It is believed that the seal (of the Polamuru plates) contains the figure of a lion, the crest of the Viṣṇukunḍins, and probably also the name of the royal donor” (Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., VI, p. 17).

MĀDHAVAVARMAN II.

Mādhavavarman II was the son of Devavarman and grandson of Mādhavavarman I. Only one copper-plate grant of this king has been discovered. It was found at Ipur, a village in the Tenali taluka of the Guntur district. The grant appears to have been issued on the 7th day of the 7th pakṣa of varṣā in the 17th (47th according to Hultzsch) regnal year,¹ from Amarapura which may probably be identified with the modern Amarāvati.

Mādhavavarman II has been described in this inscription as trikūṭa-malay-ādhipati, "lord of Trikūṭa and Malaya.". We do not know of any other Malaya except the famous Malaya mountain, generally identified with the southernmost part of the Western Ghats. Trikūṭa is placed by Kālidāsa (Raghu., IV, 58-59) in the Aparānta, i. e., Northern Koṅkaṇ. It is, however, difficult at the present state of our knowledge to justify Mādhavavarman II's claim to be in possession of those countries. The epithet may show that the Viṣṇukunḍin king came into hostile relations with Trikūṭa and Malaya. He may have joined the armies of some powerful king who invaded those regions.² Mr. B. V. Krishna Rao appears to suggest that Mādhavavarman II was Viceroy at a place called Trikūṭamalaya which he is inclined to identify with Koṭāppakoṇḍa near Narasaraopeta (Bhāratī (Telugu), 1930, p. 414; Journ.

Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., X, p. 191). This is a happy suggestion ; but I could not examine his arguments in favour of the identification.

The plates record the grant of a village, the name of which seems to be Murotukaliki, to two Brāhmaṇas named Agniśarman and Indraśarman. In connection with the śāsan-ājnā, reference is made to the attention paid by the viṣṇukunḍy-adhirāja who may be Mādhavavarman II. If, however, it may be believed that Mādhavavarman II was a viceroy under his grandfather, this adhirāja should of course signify Mādhavavarman I.

The seal attached to the Ipur plates (set II), is circular and much worn. It is divided by a cross-line into two sections like the seal of the Ipur grant (No. 1). In the lower section the legend Śrī-Mūdhava(varmā) in two lines is very faintly visible, while the symbols in the upper section cannot be made out at all (Ep. Ind., XVII, p. 338).

VI

VIKRAMENDRAVARMAN I (II ?).

The next king appears to have been Vikramendravarman I, son of Mādhavavarman I. No inscription of this king has been discovered. The most interesting point about the king is that, in the Chikkulla plates of his grandson, he is called viṣṇukuṇḍi-vākāṭa-vaṃśa-dvay-ālamkṛta-janmā. Vākāṭa is evidently the same as Vākāṭaka, which was the most glorious dynasty ruling in Northern Deccan in the 5th century of the Christian era. The relation of Vikramendravarman I with the Vākāṭakas is also referred to in the Ramatirtham plates of his son, where he is called ubhaya-vaṃś-ālamkārabhūta (who is the ornament of both the dynasties).

“The Vākāṭakas were the neighbours of the Kadambas and the Vākāṭaka kingdom extended up to the modern town of Kurnool on the banks of the Kṛishṇā. We know that the famous temple of Śrīśailam or Śrī-parvata is in the Kurnool district, and ‘a story, as related in the Sthala-māhātmya of the place, says that the princess Chandrāvati, a daughter of the Gupta king Chandragupta, conceived a passion for the God on the Śrīśaila hill and began offering every day a garland of jasmine (mallikā) flowers to him’ (Report on Epigraphy for 1914-1915, Part II, 91).

“In fact, we shall see that this dynasty (scil. that of the Viṣṇukuṇḍins) had for its tutelary deity the God of Śrī-parvata and that the first (?) king of this dynasty Mādhavavarman married a Viṣṇukuṇḍin (? Vākāṭaka) princess. I think there can be no doubt that this princess was the daughter or grand-daughter of queen Prabhāvatī," the daughter of king Candragupta II and wife of the Vākāṭaka king Rudrasena (see Dubreuil, Anc Hist. Dec., pp. 73-74). According to Vincent Smith (J.R.A.S., 1914, p. 137) the mother of Viṣṇukunḍin Vikramendravarman I was the daughter of the Vākāṭaka king Hariṣeṇa who claimed to have conquered the countries of Andhra and Kālīṅga.

INDRAVARMAN.

The son and successor of Vikramendravarman I was Indravarman, to whom belong the plates discovered at a place called Ramatirtham in the vicinity of Vizianagram. The king has been described as parama-māheśvara (staunch devotee of Maheśvara, i. e., Śiva) and aneka-caturddanta-samaraśata-sahasra-saṃghaṭṭa-vijayī. The significance of the latter epithet may be understood from what has been already discussed above. It refers to the king's struggle with his eastern or north-eastern neighbours. In the Chikulla grant he is said to have made some ghaṭikās, which mean establishments (probably founded in most cases by kings) for holy and learned men. Ghaṭikā is mentioned in the Talgunda inscription of Śāntivarman and the Kasakudi grant of Nandivarman. It is the same as Brahmapurī of other records (Ep. Ind., VIII, p. 26). In the same grant, Indravarman is also called parameśvara and bhrūbhaṅga-kara-vinirdhūta-samagra-dāyāda. It is suggested that the latter epithet refers to his success against the viceregal line of Trikuṭa-malaya (Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., X, p. 191).

The Ramatirtham plates (Ep. Ind., XII, p. 133) which were issued from the Puraṇisaṅgamavāsaka (which possibly means the camp at the confluence of the river Puraṇi) on the 7th tithi of the bright half of Jyaiṣṭha in the 27th year of king Indravarman record the grant of the village of Peruvāṭaka in Pḷakirāṣṭra as an agrahāra to a taittirīyaka Brāhmaṇa named Nagnaśarman who belonged to the Maṇḍira gotra.

The agrahāra was exempted from the burden of all taxes and the peasants assembled at Peruvāṭaka were ordered to give to the Brāhmaṇa the customary share of the produce of the agrahāra and to perform regularly all duties, such as conveying message, etc. The future owners of the country are also requested not to confiscate but to protect the agrahāra. The king himself was the executor of the grant. The nature of the grant appears to support our view that king Indravarman granted the agrahāra, while leading an expedition against his eastern enemies. Pḷakirāṣṭra, as we have already noticed, is the present Vīzianagram region. It is mentioned as Pḷakiviṣaya and Paḷakiviṣaya in the inscriptions of Calukya Visnuvardhana I (Ep. Ind., IX, p 317).

VIII

VIKRAMENDRAVARMAN II (III ?).

Indravarman was succeeded by his eldest son, Vikramendravarman II. A copper-plate grant (Ep. Ind., IV, p. 193) of this king was discovered at Chikkulla in the Tuni sub-division of the Godavari district. It was issued on the 5th day of the 8th māsapakṣa of grīṣma (?) in the 10th year of the king, from the Lendulūravāsaka which has been identified by Ramayya with modern Deṇḍalūru near Ellore.

King Vikramendravarman II, who was a parama-māheśvara like his father, hereby dedicated a village called Regonṛaṇa to Somagireśvaranātha in honour of the matted-haired, three-eyed God, the Lord of the three worlds. Somagireśvaranātha appears to have been the name applied to a liṅga established in a temple at Lendulūra

The village of Regonṛaṇa is said to have been situated to the south of the village of Rāvireva on the bank of the Kṛṣṇaveṇṇā (Kṛishṇa)¹ in Natṛpaṭi which appears to be the name of a district.

The seal of Vikramendravarman II attached to the Chikkulla plates "bears in relief on a slightly countersunk surface a well-executed lion, which stands to the proper right, raises the right forepaw, opens the mouth and apparently has a double tail" (loc. cit.). It, however, seems to me that the tail of the lion is not double as Kielhorn takes it to be, but is only raised above the back so as to end in a loop. Compare the figure of the lion on the Ramatirtham plates of Indravarman.

CHAPTER VI

THE EARLY PALLAVAS.

I

EARLY HISTORY OF THE KĀŅCĪ REGION.¹

The earliest reference to Kāñcīpura (Conjeeverman in the Chingleput district of the Madras Presidency) seems to be that in the Mahābhāṣya (iv, 2 second āhnika) of the great grammarian Patañjali whose "date, B. C. 150; may now be relied upon" (Bomb. Gaz., I, ii, p. 140). Patañjali is now generally taken to have been a contemporary of the first Śuṅga king, Puṣyamitra, who reigned from circa 185 to 149 B. C. according to Smith (E. Hist. Ind., 4th ed., p. 208 ff.). The mention of Kāñcīpura in the Mahābhāṣya goes to show that Kāñcī became a place of importance as early as the beginning of the second century B. C. It is however not certain whether Kāñcī was of political or commercial importance in the age of the Mahābhāṣya.

If traditions recorded by the Chinese pilgrim Yuan Chwang are to be believed, Kāñcī rose to prominence even earlier than the age of the Mahābhāṣya. This Chinese pilgrim tells us that he noticed a stūpa about hundred feet high, built by king Aśoka in the city of Kāñcī (Beal, Bud. Rec. West. World, II, p. 230). In this connection we may also note the mention of Aśoka or Aśokavarman as one of the early Pallava kings in the mythical portion of the later Pallava inscriptions. Hultzsch appears to be right in taking this Aśoka or Aśokavarman as "a modification of the ancient Maurya king Aśoka." The claim of having this great Maurya emperor as predecessor is to be found also in the Rājatarāṅginī, the traditional history of Kashmir (i, 102-06). Though the genealogy of Aśoka given in the

Kashmir chronicle does not tally with the Maurya genealogy found in the Purāṇas, the description of the Kashmir king named Aśoka "who had freed from sins and had embraced the doctrine of Jina (i. e., Buddha), covered Śuśkaletra and Vitastāra with numerous stūpas," clearly shows that he is no other than the great king of Pāṭaliputra. The inclusion of Maurya Aśoka in the traditional Pallava genealogy is therefore not impossible.

If however we take the find-spots of Aśokan inscriptions so far discovered in the far south as establishing the southernmost boundāry of the Maurya empire in Aśoka's time, it would appear that the Kāñcī region lay outside that empire. Nevertheless, if traditions recorded in early Tamil works are to be believed, the Maurya frontier at the time of Candragupta, grandfather of Aśoka, possibly extended far to the south of Kāñcī. "We have seen that in the south the Maurya power, at one time, had probably penetrated as far as the Podiyil hill in the Tinñevelly district. In the time of Aśoka, the Maurya frontier had receded probably to the Pennar river near Nellore, as the Tamil kingdoms are referred to as prachamta or border states and are clearly distinguished from the imperial dominions (viñita or rāja-visaya) which stretched only as far south as the Chitaldrug district of Mysore" (Raychaudhuri, Pol. Hist. Anc. Ind., 2nd ed., p. 195). If then the Kāñcī region was once under the Mauryas, it may not be altogether impossible that owing to the commercial importance of its position Kāñcī attracted the notice of a Maurya emperor or a viceroy of the southernmost Maurya province, who assigned this Sanskritised name to a Dravidian original like Kacci (Kaccippedu) or Kañji.¹

The exhaustive list of countries, mentioned in Gautamī Balaśrī's inscription, over which Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi is said to have ruled, does not mention any district of the far south. This fact along with the conspicuous absence of inscriptions and coins of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi in the Andhra region possibly goes to show that the country was outside the kingdom of this Śātavāhana king. It must however be noticed that Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi has been described in that famous Nasik Cave inscription as lord of the Vindhya, Rkṣavat, Pāriyātra, Sahya, Kṛṣṇagiri (Kanhari), possibly Śrīśaila (maca-siri-ṭana=Martya-śrī or Śrīstana?), Mahendra, Malaya, Setagiri and Cakora mountains. Malaya and Mahendra, quite well-known in Sanskrit literature, have been identified respectively with the Western Ghats (to the south of the Nilgiri) and the Eastern Ghats. If there is in the list really the name of Śrīśaila, it is to be found in the Kurnool district of the Madras Presidency. Cakora has been mentioned along with Śrīśaila in the Purāṇas. It is therefore possible that Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi claimed a sort of suzerainty over the whole of southern India. Since there is no mention of the Himālaya, the list of mountains in Gautamīputra's kingdom does not appear to be altogether conventional. Another important point in this connection is the king's epithet ti-samuda-toya-pīta-vāhana which says that his war-horses drank water from the three seas. We are to notice that the inscription does not refer to the conventional catuḥ-saṃudra, but only to tri-samudra (three seas) which evidently signifies the Western (Arabian) sea, Eastern sea (Bay of Bengal) and Southern sea (Indian Ocean). The traditional southern expedition of Maurya Candragupta and the southern expeditions of the Calukyas of Bādāmi and Kalyāṇī, of the Rāṣṭrakūṭas of Mālkheḍ and later of Śivājī and Haider Ali show that it was almost a custom with great Deccan kings to lead expeditions to the far south. Is it impossible that

The Amaravati inscription of Vāsiṣṭhīputra Pulumāvi (Arch. Surv. S. Ind., I, p. 100 ; pl. LVI, No. 1), Amaravati inscription of siri-Sivamaka-Sada (ibid, p. 61, pl. LVI, No. 2), Chinna inscription of Gautamīputra Yajña Śātakarṇi (Ep. Ind., I, p. 95), Kodavali inscription of Vāsiṣṭhīputra Caḍa Sāta (ibid, XIII, p. 316 ff.) and the Myakadoni inscription of Pulumāvi (ibid, XIV, p. 155) however clearly show that the successors of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi certainly ruled in the Andhra region. This southerly extension of the Śātavāhana power may have been due to the rise of the house of Caṣṭana who seems to have established himself at Ujjayinī and to have been a contemporary of the Greek geographer Ptolemy (c. 140 A.D.) and of the Śātavāhana king Vāsiṣṭhīputra Pulumāvi, son of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi. We know from the Junagadh inscription (ibid, VIII, p. 44 ff.) that Caṣṭana's grandson Rudradāman (c. 130-150 A.D.), who for some time ruled conjointly with his grandfather,² was reigning over some of the countries that were formerly under the possession of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi.

The occupation of Andhradeśa and the adjoining districts by the later Śātavāhanas is also proved by numismatic evidence. According to Rapson (Catalogue, p. lxxi) the Śātavāhana coins found in the Kistna-Godavari region "fall into two classes distinguished from each other both by their ¹ and their fabric." In the district of the first fabric, coins of the following five kings have been found (ibid, lxxii) :

1. Vāsiṣṭhīputra śrī-Pulumāvi,
2. Vāsiṣṭhīputra Śivaśrī Śātakarṇi,
3. Vāsiṣṭhīputra śrī-Candra Śāti.
4. Gautamīputra śrī-Yajña Śātakarṇi, and
5. śrī-Rudra Śātakarṇi.

In the district of the second fabric are found coins struck by the following three kings (ibid, p. lxxiv) :

1. śrī-Candra Śāti,
2. Gautamīputra śrī-Yajña Śātakarṇi, and
3. śrī-Rudra Śātakarṇi.

Some lead coins found in the Anantapur and Cuddapah districts have been taken by Rapson to have belonged to some feudatories of the Śātavāhana kings (ibid, pp. lxx-xi). This suggestion appears to be supported by the following facts. Firstly, in the Chitaldrug district has been found a coin of one Sadakaṇa (Śātakarṇi) Kalalāya Mahārāṭhi who was most probably a feudatory of the great Śātavāhanas; secondly, the Myakadoni (Bellary district) inscription of Pulumāvi shows that the Bellary region was called the janapada (district) of Śātavāhanihāra, and that it was under the rule of a governor (mahāsenāpati) whose name was Skandanāga. This fact seems to show that the southern districts of the Śātavāhana kingdom were ruled by military chiefs.

From what has been said above it is perfectly clear that the dominions of the later Śātavāhanas extended as far as the borders of the district round Kāñcī. We shall now consider the question whether Kāñcī could have formed a part of the Śātavāhana kingdom.

There is no epigraphic evidence to prove that the Śātavāhana kings ruled over Kāñcī; but certain lead coins with “ ship with two masts ” on one side and the Ujjain symbol on the other have been discovered on the Coromandel coast between Madras and Cuddalore. “ That they belong to the Andhra (Sātavahana) dynasty seems certain from the Ujjain symbol which forms their reverse type, and from such traces as remains of the coin-legend. On the solitary specimen on which these traces admit of any probable restoration the inscription appears to be intended for Siri-Pu[ḷumā]visa (No. 95, p. 22; pl. V).”¹ Of course, mere discovery of some coins of a certain dynasty in a certain area may not prove that that particular area was under the direct control of the rulers of that dynasty. But this distinct type of ship-coins found exclusively in the Coromandel coast possibly supports the view that at least the issuer (or issuers) of the ship-coins had some sort of political supremacy over the coastal region. But who ruled the coast-country during the time of the later Sātavāhanas who most probably issued the ship-coins?

According to some scholars, “The coast-region in which these coins are found was in the third century B.C. inhabited by the Colas; but before the middle of the second century A.D. it seems to have passed into the power of the Pallavas who were thus contemporary with the later Andhras (i. e., Sātavāhanas).”² This view however can be proved to be unwarranted on the evidence of the Periplus of the Erythraean Sea and the Geography of Ptolemy.

We may not expect to get the name of Kāñcīpura in the Periplus as this work does not attempt to give an exhaustive list of cities and towns of the countries about which it speaks. The Kāñcī region was possibly not a separate political unit in the age of this work (c. 80 A.D.). The Periplus says : “ § 59. From Komari (mod. Kumārikā) towards the south (actually toward NNE) this region extends to Kolkhi (Karkai on the Tāmraparnī in the Tinnevely district; Smith, op. cit., p. 469).....; and it belongs to the Pandian kingdom. Beyond Kolkhi there follows another district called the Coast country (=Coromandel or Cola-maṇḍala coast), which lies on a bay, and has a region inland called Argaru (=Uragapura=mod. Uṛaiyūr near Tanjore).....§ 60. Among the market-towns of these countries and the harbours where the ships put in from Damirika and from the north, the most important are, in order as they lie, first Kamara, then Poduka, then Sopatma; in which there are ships of the country coasting along the shore as far as Damirika; and other very large made of single logs bound together called Sangara; but those which make the voyage to Khryse and to the Ganges are called Kolandia and are very large.” We do not definitely know whether any of these three ports mentioned by the Periplus belonged to the district of Kāñcī, but the fact that the Periplus after referring to the Coast country refers to Masalia (=district round Masulipatam) possibly suggests that the borders of the Coast country touched, in the age of the Periplus, those of the district round Masulipatam. This suggestion, it should be noticed, is in accord with the tradition which says that “the Chola country (Cholamaṇḍalam) was bounded on the north by the Pennar and on the south by the southern Vellaru river; or, in other words, it extended along the eastern coast from Nellore to Pudukottai, where it abutted on the Pāṇḍya territory” (Smith, op. cit., p. 480).

In the Geography of Ptolemy (c. 140 A.D.) who gives a fairly exhaustive list of countries, cities and important places, we do not find the name of Kāñcī; but the district of Kāñcī can be satisfactorily identified from Ptolemy’s map of India. The order of the position of countries in the east coast has been thus given in Ptolemy’s Geography, VII, i :

1. Country of the Pandiones (=Pāṇḍyas) with its capital at Modoura (=Madurā) 125° 16°20', ruled by Pandion (§89);

2. District of Batoi (§90) with its metropolis at Nisamma 125°10' 10°30' (§12);

3. Coast of the Soringoi (=Colas) with its capital at Orthoura 130° 16° 20', ruled by Sôrnagos (§91);

4. Arouarnoi with its capital at Malanga 130° 13°, ruled by Basaronagos (§92); and

5. District of the Maisôloi (called Maisôlia in §15, and Masalia in the Periplus) with its metropolis at Pitundra 135° 18° (§93).

It is clear from the situation of the above countries that on the way from the district of Masulipatam to the Pāṇḍya country, i. e., to the south of the former, lay first the country of Arouarnoi, then the coast of the Soringoi, and then Batoi. This "coast of the Soringoi" is evidently the same as the "Coast country" of the Periplus which seems to represent the Coḷa-maṇḍala of Sanskrit literature. Its capital Orthoura appears therefore to be the same as Argaru of the Periplus and Uṛaiyūr (=Uragapura) of the present day.¹ But what about this Arouarnoi which has not been mentioned in the Periplus, but has been placed between the Coḷa-maṇḍala and Masulipatam by Ptolemy? In this connection it is interesting to note what Dr. S. K. Aiyangar says about the countries of this coast. "The east coast region, however, beginning with the river Vellar flowing across the state of Pudukottah now and emptying itself into the Bay of Bengal which marked the orthodox southern boundary of the Cholas, constituted the Chola-maṇḍalam which actually extended northwards therefrom to as far as the river South Pennar where began the division known as Aruvānāḍu which extended northwards along the coast almost as far as the Northern Pennar" (R. Gopalan, Pallavas of Kanchi, p. xi-ii). There can hardly be any doubt that this Aruvānāḍu between the northern and southern Pennars is the Arouarnoi of Ptolemy's Geography. This Arouarnoi is practically the same as the Kāñcī-maṇḍala, i. e., the district round Kāñcī.¹ It must however be noticed that the capital of this district, at the time of Ptolemy, was at Malanga which appears from Ptolemy's map to have been far to the north of Kāñcī.

It now appears that the Cola-maṇḍala or the Cola coast which at the time of the Periplus was possibly bounded by the Pāṇḍya country in the south and the "Masuli district" in the north was divided into two kingdoms in the age of Ptolemy (c. 140 A D.). What is more interesting is that at the time of the Greek geographer, the Cola-maṇḍala proper was being ruled by a king named Sôr-nāga, while Aruvānāḍu, the northern part of the former Cola kingdom, was under the rule of a king named Basaro-nāga. We cannot be definite whether these two names really represent Indian names like Sura-nāga (or Sūrya-nāga) and Vajra-nāga or Varṣa-nāga; but there can be no doubt that at Ptolemy's time the Cola kingdom as well as the district round Kāñcī was ruled by princes who belonged to the family of the Nāgas. The existence of the Nāgas in the Coromandel coast seems to be further supported by the existence of the city called Uaraga-pura in the Pāṇḍya country and another of the same name in the Cola country. Uraga, as we all know, is the same as Nāga. It is however difficult to ascertain whether the "inland region called Argaru (=Uragapura)" was being ruled by the Nāgas (=Uragas) in the age of the Periplus; nevertheless the name supports a conjecture that in or before that period a place in the heart of the Cola country was under the Nāgas.¹

In this connection we should also notice the Buddhist traditions of Ceylon and Siam which speak of a Nāga country on the coast near the "Diamond Sands," to the south of Dantapura, between the mouth of the Ganges and Ceylon (Cunningham, Anc. Geog. Ind., ed. 1924, pp. 611-12). This country has been called Majerika. We do not know whether Majerika is the same as Masulika (Masulipatam) or a district named after the Manjhira branch of the Godavari or it is Ptolemy's Arouarnoi where the Nāga king Basaronāga once ruled. But the traditions seem to support the existence of a Nāga country on the eastern coast. Much value of the traditions is however vitiated by the fact that the epochs to which the two traditions refer are irreconcilable. The Ceylonese tradition gives the date as B.C. 157, while the Siamese tradition gives A.D. 310-313. If we believe the latter tradition (and also in the fact that the tradition refers to the Nāgas of the Coromandel coast), the Pallavas would appear to have risen to prominence after A.D. 313. This however seems to be improbable.

Before the middle of the second century therefore not the Pallavas but the Nāgas were ruling the coast country.

As scholars generally take Ptolemy's Siriptolemaios (siri-Pulumāvi), ruler of Baithāna (Paiṭhan in the Aurangabad district) to be the same as Vāsiṣṭhīputra śrī-Pulumāvi, son of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi, we see that Basaro-nāga, ruler of the Kāñcī region, and Sār-nāga, ruler of the Coḷa-maṇḍala, reigned contemporaneously with this Sātavāhana king who possibly was the first to establish Sātavāhana power in the Andhra country (Pol. Hist. Anc. Ind., 2nd ed., p. 313).¹ It may not be altogether impossible that the successors of Basaro-nāga acknowledged the suzerainty of the powerful successors of Vāsiṣṭhīputra Pulumāvi, such as the great Gautamīputra Yajña Śātakarṇi. It should be noticed here that Pulumāvi of the ship-coins appears to be the same as the king of the Myakadoni inscription, who was probably a successor of Vāsiṣṭhīputra Pulumāvi and was the last king of the direct Sātavāhana line.

II

RISE OF THE PALLAVAS¹

Scholars are now generally of opinion that the Pallavas were not indigenous to the Kāñcī region. Thus Dr. S. K. Aiyangar says, "The Pallavas seem nevertheless to have been foreign to the locality as far as our evidence takes us at present" (op. cit., p. x). The question is now: When did the Pallavas attain political supremacy in the Kāñcī region?

We have already seen that about the middle of the second century A.D., when Ptolemy is known to have written his Geography, the above region was being ruled by the Nāgas. The Pallavas therefore did not rule as a recognised political power in the same locality before the middle of the second century of the Christian era. They are however believed to have risen to prominence certainly before the middle of the fourth century A.D. which is the time of Samudragupta's Allahabad pillar inscription. This record, as we all know, mentions a certain Kāñceyaka Viṣṇugopa with whom the Gupta king (c. 330-75 A.D.) came into conflict during his South Indian campaign. This "Viṣṇugopa, ruler of Kāñcī" has been unanimously taken to have belonged to the Pallava family.

To about the same period should be assigned the Mayidavolu (Ep. Ind., VI, p. 84) and Hirahadagalli (ibid, I, p. 2) grants of the Pallava ruler Sivaskandavarman, and the British Museum grant (ibid, VIII, p. 143) dated in the reign of a Pallava king named Vijaya-Skandavarman. These grants are written in Prakrit and are unanimously taken to be the earliest available epigraphic records of the Pallavas.

There is however difference of opinion regarding the date of these epigraphs. But, as we shall show in the next section, they appear to belong to the first half of the fourth century A.D. The Pallavas therefore seem to have attained political supremacy in the Kāñcī region after the middle of the second but before the beginning of the fourth century of the Christian era. Now, the next question would be: Who were the Pallavas, and how did they succeed in obtaining mastery over the Kāñcī region from the hands of the Nāgas?

It is almost cêrtain that the Pallavas originally were executive officers under the Śātavāhana kings.¹ They were most probably in charge of the government of districts with titles like Mahārathi and Mahāsenāpati, i.e., governor. There is inscriptional evidence to prove that the Śātavāhana kings took their officers from the families of the Guptas and Nāgas. A Nasik inscription mentions an officer named Śiva-gupta, and the Karle inscriptions refer to Gupta and Śivaskanda-Gupta (Pol. Hist. Anc. Ind., 2nd ed., p. 332). We have already seen that a Nāga chief named Skanda-nāga was ruling the Bellary district during the reign of Pulumāvi who was possibly the last Śātavāhana king of the main line. The Pallavas may have been officers like the Guptas and Nāgas.

But, who were the Pallavas?² Were they identical with the people called Pahlava or Palhava in inscriptions and literature? Some scholars are in favour of the identification. Their arguments may be summed up as follows. The Palhavas, i.e., the Parthians, are known from inscriptions and coins to have been ruling in North-Western India in the beginning of the Christian era. At the time of the Periplus, "Parthian princes [who] were constantly driving each other out," were occupying the valley of the Indus. This people possibly pushed a little down to the south when they came into conflict with the Sātavāhana king Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi who is called "subduer of the Śakas, Yavanas and the Palhavas." Indeed, from the Junagadh inscription of Rudradāman we learn that a Pahlava¹ governor named Suviśākha, son of Kulaipa, was ruling the district of Anarta¹ and Surāṣṭra under that great Saka king. If, as it seems to be, the territory of the Palhavas lay not far off from the Sātavāhana kingdom, if they really came into conflict with the Sātavāhanas at the time of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi, if the Palhavas accepted offices in the government of neighbouring kings, and if the Sātavāhana government accepted services of persons belonging to the neighbouring tribes, there is nothing impossible in the suggestion that the Palhavas were employed by the Sātavāhana kings and eventually carved out a principality in the south of the Sātavāhana kingdom after the decline of the latter.

² See H. Krishnasastri, Ep. Ind., XV, p. 246 "The origin of the Pallavas has been obscure. A suggestion has been thrown out by Mr Venkayya that they may have been connected with the Pahlavas, mentioned in the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas and there classified as foreigners outside the pale of Aryan society (Arch. Surv. Rep. for 1906-07, p. 217 f.) It is true that here the Pallavas are so classed with the Sakas, Yavanas and other foreign tribes, nevertheless the possibility of their being a class that originated from an intermingling of the Brāhmaṇas with the indigenous Dravidian tribes is not altogether precluded. This presumption is confirmed partly by a

curious statement made in the Rāyakota copper plates (above, Vol. V, p. 52) that Āśvatthāman, the Brāhmaṇa founder of the race, married a Nāga woman and had by her a son called Skandaśiṣhya. Other copper-plates (e.g., S.I.I, Vol. II, p. 353, vv. 16 & 17) which relate a similar story mention in the name of Skandaśiṣhya the name of the eponymous king Pallava, after whom the family came to be called Pallava. Hence it appears almost probable that the Pallavas like the Kadambas of Banavāsī (Dy Kan Dist, p. 286 and fn 2), the Nolambas of Mysore (Rice's Mysore and Coorg, p. 55), the Matsyas of Oḍḍavāḍi (Oddādi in the Vizagapatam district) and other similar dynasties were the products of Brāhmaṇa inter-connections with the Dravidian races, as the stories related of their origin indicate. The Pallavas are however referred to in an early Kadamba record of the 6th century A. D. (Talgunda inscription, Ep. Ind., VIII, p. 31 ff., verse 11 ?) as Kṣhatrīyas, and their earliest sovereigns are stated to have performed Vedic sacrifices like the Aryan kings of old."

We however think that there are very strong grounds against the identification of the Pallavas with the people called Palhava (i.e., the Parthians). If the people who were called Palhava or Pahlava at the time of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi and Rudradāman, that is to say, during the first half of the second century A.D., is the same as the Pallavas whom we find stationed at Kāñcī at about the end of the third century, how are we to explain the fact that the latter have never been called Palhava either in the records of their own or in the records and works that refer to them? It is improbable that within the short period of about 150 years a tribe had utterly forgotten its original name, so much so that not even for once did its members use that name in the whole course of their history, though Indian literature in all succeeding ages has recognised a tribe named Palhava, sometimes even side by side with Pallava.

Another important point in this connection is that, in the Hirahadagalli grant, the earliest known Pallava king Śivaskandavarman, who appears to have ruled in the first quarter of the fourth century A.D., is reported to have performed the Aśvamedha sacrifice. There is no evidence that kings belonging to foreign dynasties or tribes like the Śaka, Kuṣāṇa, Gurjara, Hūṇa and others ever performed the Horse-sacrifice, even when they were Hinduised. It seems highly improbable that a foreigner would be very favourable to the obnoxious practices followed during the course of this sacrifice. Unless an immigrant tribe hopelessly forgets itself and imbibes utter orthodoxy of Hinduism, it seems impossible for its members to be able to expose their wives to such indelicate practices as are necessary in performing the Horse-sacrifice.¹ The performance of this out-and-out Brahmanical sacrifice by the earliest known Pallava king seems to go against the theory of foreign origin of the Pallavas.

The next important point is that the family of the Pallavas is known even from the earliest record to have belonged to the Bhāradvāja gotra.¹ This Bhāradvāja gotra of the Pallavas can hardly be imitated from the gotra of any earlier dynasty that ruled in the Deccan. The Sāta-vāhanas of the main line, whose records the early Pallavas imitated in drawing theirs, did never specifically mention their own gotra. The Viṇhukaḍa Cuṭu-Sātakarṇis however called themselves Mānavya-gotra-Hārīti-putra. This title was imitated by the Kadambas who succeeded the Cuṭu-Sātakarṇis in the Kuntala country. The Calukyas who appear to have originally been provincial governors under the early Kadambaras (or probably under the Vākāṭakas), got the title in their turn along with the sovereignty of the Kanarese country. Since the Pallavas do not use metonymics like their predecessors and since their Bhāradvāja gotra cannot be reasonably proved to have been imitated from any preceding ruling dynasty of the Deccan, it seems possible that they were originally Brahmanical Hindus of the Bhāradvāja gotra and therefore belonged to Northern India.²

18-25 Mantra to be uttered by the queen of the performer of this sacrifice : ambe = 'mbike = 'mbālike na mā nyati kaś-cana, śasasty = śvakaḥ subhadrikāṃ hāmpila-vāsinīm Mahīdhara's commentary : mad = agamane = 'śvo = 'nyām = ādāya śayisyata = iti mayā gamyate. After pronouncing another mantra, the queen sits (according to Mahīdhara, lies down) beside the sacrificial horse. Queen : tā ubhau caturah pādah samprasārayāva; Adhvaryu : svarge loke prornuvāthām. After the Adhvaryu covers the bodies of the Queen and the horse with a sheet of cloth, the queen says : īrsā vāṇi retodhā reto dadhātu, and then according to Mahīdhara : mahī svayam = ev = āśva śīnam = ākṛṣya sva-yonau sthāpayati. See Satapatha-Brahmaṇa, XIII, 17, 2, and above.

Paṇini (IV. i. 117) seems to say that the Śuṅgas belonged to the Bhāradvāja gotra. From the Purāṇas we know that the Śuṅgas succeeded the Mauryas on the throne of Magadha, and the Mālavikāgnimitra informs us that a secondary capital of the Śuṅgas was at Vidiśā (mod. Besnagar near Bhilsa in the Jubbulpore district). Is it altogether impossible that the Pallavas really were a branch of the Śuṅgas of Vidiśā, who gradually pushed to the south, took services under the Sātavāhanas and eventually carved out a principality in the Kāñcī region? ¹ Whatever the value of this suggestion may be, the fact that the Pallavas never try to connect themselves with the solar and lunar dynasties, famous in Indian legends, at least seems to show that they belonged originally to a Brāhmaṇa family of Northern India. If a Brāhmaṇa family rises to royal dignity, it cannot quite naturally look back for past glory to the Sūrya and Candra vaṃśas which were Kṣatriya dynasties. They can however claim connection with Bhāradvāja Droṇa, the great epic king of Northern Pañcāla, who was a Brāhmaṇa by birth, but took the profession of the Kṣatriyas. Cf. the case of the Sena kings of Bengal, who refer to themselves in their inscriptions as Brahma-kṣatriya.

"The Purāṇic genealogy of the Rāshtrakūṭas makes its first appearance in the Sāṅgī grant (Ind Ant., Vol XII, p 247). The pretended historical genealogy of the Western Gangas may have been concocted a little earlier, but was more probably devised about A D 950 (Ep Ind, Vol. III, p 162) The Cola Purāṇic genealogy is apparently first met with in the Kalingattu-Paran (Ind Ant, Vol XIX, p. 329) which was composed in the reign of the Eastern Calukya king Kulottuṅga Chola-deva I, A D. 1063-1112 And the Purāṇic genealogy of the Eastern Gaṅgas of Kalinga-nagara is first presented in a record of A.D 1118-19 (Id., Vol XVIII, p 165) The Purāṇic genealogy of the Pallavas is the earliest such pedigree that has as yet come to light. And possibly the discovery of it in some ancient record set the later fashion which became so general "

But, how did the Pallavas occupy the Kāñcī region which was once under the Nāgas? This question is difficult to answer, as we know nothing definitely about the Pallava kings who ruled before Śivaskandavarman, or his father whose name is as yet unknown.¹ Indeed, later Pallava inscriptions, such as the Kasakudi plates of Nandivarman-Pallavamalla (S. Ind. Ins., II, p. 342), the Veluralaiyam plates of Nandivarman III (ibid., p. 508) and the Vayalur pillar inscription of Rājasimha (Ep. Ind., XVIII, p. 150), have mentioned the names of some early Pallava kings otherwise unknown and have traced the Pallava pedigree from Lord Brahman, through his descendants, Āṅgiras, Bṛhaspati, Śaṃyu, Bharadvāja, Droṇa, Aśvatthāman, Pallava and Aśoka (or Aśokavarman). There can be no question about the unhistoricity of this part of the genealogy. It is obviously fabricated on the basis of the name of the gotrarṣi of the Pallava family. We know that the Pallavas belonged to the Bhāradvāja gotra which has the pravaras, Bhāradvāja, Āṅgirasa and Bārhaspatya. Pallava is evidently the eponym, while Aśokavarman "can scarcely be considered a historical person, but appears to be a modification of the ancient Maurya king Aśoka."

It must be noted that the order and form of names mentioned after Aśokavarman in the traditional part of the Pallava genealogy are not uniform in the different inscriptions. Hultzsch therefore remarked on this part of the Kasakudi grant (S. Ind. Ins., II, p. 343), "It must rather be concluded that, at the time of Nandivarman, nothing was known of the predecessors of Simhaviṣṇu but the names of some of them, and that the order of their succession and their relation to each other and to the subsequent line of Simhavishnu, were then entirely forgotten." This part of the Pallava genealogy may be compared with the mythical genealogy of the Calukyas about which Fleet says, "For the above account (scil. Calukya genealogy before Pulikeśin I), a certain amount of foundation may be derived from the fact that from the time of Pulikeśin II onwards, the Western Chālukyas were constantly at war with the Pallavas, who were their most powerful and inveterate foes, coupled with a tradition of the later Kadambas that the founder of the Kadamba family was a certain Trinetra or Trilochana. But in other respects, the account is a farrago of vague legends and Purāṇic myths of no authority" (Bomb. Gaz., I, ii. pp. 341-42). It is therefore difficult to believe that the traditional portion of the Pallava genealogy is much useful for the purpose of authentic history. Nevertheless it is tempting to make a few suggestions.

(i) Verse 6 of the Valurpalaiyam inscription says that Virakūrca, son of Cūtapallava, obtained the insignia of royalty along with the hand of a Nāga princess (cf. phanīndra-sutayā sah = āgranīd = rāja-cihnam = akhilam). We have seen above that the Nāgas were ruling over the Kāñcī region before the rise of the Pallavas in that locality; it is therefore not impossible that Virakūrca married the heiress of the last Nāga king of Malanga and thus became the first Pallava king of the district round Kāñcī.¹ Some very late inscriptions (of about the 11th century) mention a king named Trilocana as the earliest illustrious ancestor of the Pallavas. He is also called Trinetra, Trinayana, Mukkaṇṭi-Pallava and Mukkaṇṭi-Kāḍuvetti (Butterworth, Nellore Inscriptions, I, p. 389, II, p. 671 ; cf. Ep. Ind., XI, p. 349). He is described as having, like Śiva, a third eye on the forehead and is believed by some scholars to have been a historical person who was the founder of the Telugu-Pallavas and who ruled over some part of the Telugu country (An. Rep. S. Ind. Ep., 1916, p. 138 ; Iyenger, History of the Tamils, pp. 364, 384). The historicity of this Trilocana-Pallava is impossible in view of the facts that a similar Trilocana is said to have been the progenitor of the Kadambas in some Kadamba inscriptions of about the same period (Ep. Carn, VII, Sk. 236) and that all early Pallava records deny the possibility of the existence of any such early king named Trilocana-Pallava. Many scholars have now discarded this Trilocana as purely mythical. "The name Trilocana seems to have passed from the Kadamba inscriptions of the west to the Pallava inscriptions of the east" (Moraes, Kadamba-kula, p. 8, note).

(ii) The name of the father of Vīrakūrca who was possibly the first king of the family was Cūta-Pallava. May Pallava, the name of the dynasty, have anything to do with the second syllable of the name of the first Pallava king's father? ¹

¹ Is the name Cūta-pallava (lit. twig of the mango tree) eponymical like the name Pallava? I have elsewhere suggested (Ind. Cult., IV, p. 118 ff; also below) that the names Kadamba and Pallava are possibly of totemistic origin. Tree-names, like Kadamba, of tribes and families, many of which are totemistic, are quite common in India. When, on the other hand, we find that a sept of the Muṇḍas is called Chirko, i.e., mushroom (Risely, Tribes and Castes of Bengal, II, 1892, p. 108) and another is called Seward, i.e., moss (p. 108) and that a totemistic section of the Rautiās is called Khariā, i.e., blade of grass (p. 128), the possibility of Pallava, i.e., twig, having originally a totemistic significance in connection with the Pallavas may not appear altogether impossible. Risely (p. 47) mentions Pallab as a subcaste of the Goālās of Bengal. This is evidently a corruption of the Sanskrit word vallabha meaning "cow-herd."

(iii) A successor of Vīrakūrca was Skandaśiṣya who came into conflict with a king named Satyasena (verse 7). Was this Satyasena in any way connected with the Pālakkaka Ugrasena of the Allahabad pillar inscription, who possibly ruled at Palakkāḍa (sometimes a seat of Pallava government) in the Nellore region?

(iv) Another successor of Vīrakūrca was Kumāraviṣṇu (verse 8) who is credited with the seizure of Kāñcī (grhīta-kāñcīnagara). Does it mean that the Pallavas first ruled at Malanga, the Nāga capital, which possibly lay somewhere to the north of Kāñcī and that Kumāraviṣṇu was the first Pallava king to have his capital at Kāñcī? Had the Colas, then, become again master of their country and occupied the Nāga territory as far as the city of Kāñcī? The mention of Kumāraviṣṇu and Buddhavarman together, however, makes it very probable that this Kumāraviṣṇu is to be identified with Kumāraviṣṇu I of the Chendalur grant.¹

(v) A successor of Kumāraviṣṇu was Buddhavarman, who, is called submarine fire to the sea that was the Cola army (cola-sainy-ārṇava-vāḍav-āgni). Does it signify the continuation of the war with the Colas, which we have supposed to have begun in the reign of Kumāraviṣṇu?

¹ If this identification be accepted, the other suggestion is improbable Kāñcī became the capital of the Pallavas long before the time of Kumāraviṣṇu I. In that case grhīta-kāñcīnagara would possibly mean recovering Kāñcī from the temporary occupation of the Colas.

III

DATE OF SIVASKANDAVARMAN¹

The Mayidavolu and Hirahadagalli grants of Sivaskandavarman and the British Museum grant dated in the reign of king viyaya-Skandavarman are the earliest available records of the Pallavas. They are written in Prakrit, while the later epigraphs of the early Pallavas are in Sanskrit. We have already noticed that there is a controversy over the date of these records and, therefore, of the Pallava rulers named Sivaskandavarman and Skandavarman to whom they belong. Fleet thought that these kings should be placed after the Pallava king Viṣṇugopa mentioned in the Allahabad pillar inscription (Bomb. Gaz., I, ii, p. 319). According to this scholar therefore the two Pallava kings reigned about the last quarter of the 4th century A.D. Prof. Durbeuil (Anc. His. Dec., p. 70), on the other hand, assigns Sivaskandavarman, whom he identifies with viyaya-Skandavarman, to about A.D. 250-75, i.e., about the third quarter of the third century. It is now generally believed that the king or kings mentioned in the Prakrit grants of the Pallavas ruled before the time of Viṣṇugopa, ruler of Kāñcī, mentioned in the Allahabad pillar inscription (Krishnasastri, Ep. Ind., XV, p. 243; Jayaswal, History of India, p. 181). Here I am going to show that Sivaskandavarman probably reigned in the first quarter of the 4th century and that viyaya-Skandavarman of the British Museum grant was possibly a different king who seems to have reigned a little later than Sivaskandavarman.

Ptolemy who wrote his geography about A.D. 140, mentions (VII, i, §63 and §82) Tiastênes (=Caṣṭana), ruler of Ozênê (Ujjayinī), and Siriptolemaios (=siri-Pulumāyi or °māvi), ruler of Baithāna (Paithan in the Aurangabad district), as his contemporaries. The Andau inscriptions, issued in the joint-reign of Caṣṭana and his grandson Rudradāman, are dated in the year 52 which must be referred to the Śaka era and would correspond to A.D. 130 (Rychaudhuri, Pol. Hist. Anc. Ind., 2nd ed., p. 307 ff). Caṣṭana's contemporary Pulumāvi who has been identified with Vāsiṣṭhīputra śrī-Pulumāvi, son of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi (ibid., p. 313), must also have ruled about the same time.

According to the Matsya Purāṇa, which is the only work that gives a fuller list of the Sātavāhana kings and seems therefore to be more authentic as regards Sātavāhana chronology than the other Purāṇas, the following Sātavāhana kings ruled after Vāsiṣṭhīputra Pulumāvi (see Rapson, Catalogue, p. lxvii) :

1. Śivaśrī [Śātakarṇi]	... 7 years.
2. Śivaskanda Śātakarṇi	... 7 years.
3. Yajñaśrī Śātakarṇi	... 29 years. ¹
4. Vijaya	... 6 years.
5. Caṇḍaśrī [Śātakarṇi]	... 10 years. ²
<hr/>
	59 years.
6. Pulomā[vi]	... 7 years. ³
66 years.

² The real name of the Purāṇic Caṇḍaśrī appears to have been Caṇḍa (or Candra) Śātakarṇi. He is never called Candrasrī or Caṇḍrasrī in inscriptions and coins.

³ The Myakadoni inscription (Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 153) of Pulumāvi is dated in his eighth regnal year. He therefore appears to have ruled for more than seven years.

The only inscription of Pulomā or Pulumāvi, the last king of the list, has been discovered at Myakadoni in the Bellary district (Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 153). We therefore cannot be definite as regards his rule over Andhradeśa proper. But the Amaravati inscriptions of Vāsiṣṭhīputra Pulumāvi and Sivamaka Sada (=Śivaskanda Śātakarṇi?), the Chinna (Kistna district) inscription of Yajña Śātakarṇi and the Kodavali (Godavari district) inscription of Caḍa Śāta or Śāti (Caṇḍaśrī or Candrasrī Śātakarṇi) leave no doubt that at least the Śātavāhana kings of the list, who ruled before Pulumāvi of the Myakadoni grant, were rulers of the Andhra country (Arch. Surv. S. Ind., Vol. I, pp. 61 and 100; Ep. Ind., I, p. 95; XVIII, p. 316). As Vāsiṣṭhīputra Pulumāvi, son of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi, is known to have ruled in the second quarter of the second century, it appears that the Andhra country was under the Śātavāhana yoke at least up to the beginning of the third century A.D.

According to Krishnasastri (Ep. Ind., XVIII, p. 318) the second year of Caḍa Śāti is equivalent to A.D. 210. We may therefore arrange approximately the chronology of the above kings as follows :

- | | |
|-------------------------|-------------------------|
| 1. Sivaśrī Śātakarṇi | ... circa A.D. 160-166. |
| 2. Sivaskanda Śātakarṇi | .. circa A.D. 167-173. |
| 3. Yajña(śrī) Śātakarṇi | ... circa A.D. 174-202. |
| 4. Vijaya | ... circa A.D. 203-208. |
| 5. Caṇḍa(śrī) Śātakarṇi | ... circa A.D. 209-218. |

According to the Matsya Purāṇa, Vāsiṣṭhīputra Pulumāvi ruled for twenty-eight years. He therefore seems to have ruled from about A.D. 132 to 159.¹ This date, though approximate, corroborates the fact that Vāsiṣṭhīputra śrī-Pulumāvi was a contemporary of the Greek geographer Ptolemy who wrote his book about 140 A.D., and of the Śaka ruler Caṣṭana who is known to have reigned in A.D. 130.

The Ikṣvākus who succeeded the Śātavāhanas in the rule of the Kistna-Guntur region (i.e., the Andhra country)¹ must therefore have risen to prominence not before the time of Uaṇḍa (śrī) Śātakarṇi. The sovereignty of the Ikṣvākus over Andhradeśa thus appears to have begun from about the end of the first quarter of the third century A.D. Vāsiṣṭhīputra Cāṃtamūla I, the first known Ikṣvākū king, should be placed after the time of Caṇḍa(śrī). He could not have been a feudatory of the Śātavāhanas, as he is said to be a performer of the Aśvamedha and Vājapeya sacrifices. We have already seen that according to the Śatapatha-Brahmaṇa (V, 1. 1. 13),² the performance of the Vājapeya bestows on the performer a superior kind of kingship called sāmrājya, while Kieth has rightly pointed out that the Aśvamedha "is an old and famous rite, which kings alone can bring to increase their realms" (Rel. Phil. Ved. Upaniṣ., p. 343). It is perfectly clear from statements contained in the Baudhāyana-Śrautasūtra (XV, 1), Āpastamba-Śrautasūtra (XX, i, 1, quoted in eighteenth year of Gautamīputra is therefore A D 124 or 124 + x. Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi thus seems to have ascended the throne in A D 106 or 106 + x. The latest inscriptional date of this king is year 24, which would correspond to A.D. 130 or 130 + x. His son Vāsiṣṭhīputra Pulumāvi appears to have lost much of his territories to the Śaka ruler Rudradāman before Pulumāvi's 19th regnal year and before Śaka 52 (A.D. 150), which is the date of Rudradāman's Junagadh inscription. According to Rapson therefore the accession of Vāsiṣṭhīputra Pulumāvi took place in about A.D. (150—19=) 131. See Rapson, op cit, pp xxvi-ii, xxx, xxxvi-viii. The chronology we have proposed here would place Vāsiṣṭhīputra Pulumāvi approximately in A D 132-159 and Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi, who seems to have ruled for about 24 years, in A.D. 107-131.

² Cf. rājā vai rājasūyen=estōā bhavati, sāmrāj= vājapeyen=āvaran hī rājyam paraṃ sāmrājyaṃ kāmayaeta vai rājā saṃrāj=bhavituṇe, etc.

Sabdakalpadruma-Parīṣiṣṭa, s. v.) and the Taittirīya-Brāhmaṇa (III, viii, 9, 4; V, iv, 12, 3) that a feudatory ruler could never perform the Aśvamedha sacrifice.¹ The Horse-sacrifice celebrated by Cāṃtamūla I, therefore, appears to suggest his success against his Sātavāhana overlords.

We do not know for how many years the Ikṣvāku king Vāsiṣṭhīputra Cāṃtamūla I ruled over the Andhra country. It is however known from the Jaggayyapeta records that his son, Virapurisadata, reigned at least up to his twentieth year, while according to the Kottampalugu record, Ehuṇḍa Cāṃtamūla II, successor of Virapurisadata and the last known king of the dynasty, ruled at least up to his eleventh year. It is therefore reasonable to suppose that these three Ikṣvāku kings together ruled for about more than half a century. The end of the reign of Cāṃtamūla II thus appears to have fallen in the fourth quarter of the third century A.D.

According to the evidence of the Mayidavolu grant, dated in the reign of Śivaskandavarman's father, Andhrāpatha (i.e., the Andhra country) with its headquarters at Dhamṇākada (Dhānyakāṭaka) passed from the Ikṣvākus to the possession of the Pallavas. Pallava Śivaskandavarman, who was like Cāṃtamūla I a performer of the great Vājapeya and Aśvamedha sacrifices,² was preceded in the suzerainty of Andhrāpatha at least by his father who must have ruled the country after Ehuṇḍa Cāṃtamūla II. Śivaskandavarman therefore can hardly be placed earlier than A.D. 300. His title [Dharma-] Mahārājādhirāja, which, in North India, the Guptas imitated from the Kuṣāṇas at the beginning of the fourth century also points to this direction. This view, moreover, can be confirmed by an altogether different line of argument.

² The Aśvamedha performed by Śivaskandavarman seems to suggest his success against the Ikṣvākus and other neighbouring powers.

There is some linguistic difference between the grants of Śivaskandavarman and the records of the Ikṣvāku kings. Like the Śātavāhana grants and other early Prakrit inscriptions, the Ikṣvāku records (excepting a record of the last known King; Ep. Ind., XXI, p. 62) express compound-consonants by single letters. The Mayidavolu and Hirahadagalli grants of Śivaskandavarman, on the other hand, express them, in many cases, by two letters. Though the grants of Śivaskandavarman are in Prakrit, the legend on the seals of both the grants are written in Sanskrit. The Hirahadagalli grant, moreover, ends in a maṅgala which is also written in Sanskrit. This linguistic difference between the epigraphs of the known Ikṣvāku kings and those of Śivaskandavarman (one of whose grants is dated in the reign of his father) clearly points to the fact that there was an interval between the reign of the former and that of the latter. Consequently, Śivaskandavarman could not have ruled much earlier than the beginning of the fourth century A.D. He cannot however be placed later than Kāñceyaka Viṣṇugopa who came into conflict with Samudragupta about the middle of that century. We have shown that Pallava Śivaskandavarman ruled earlier than Śālaṅkāyana Devavarman who was a predecessor of Śālaṅkāyana Hastivarman, the Vaiṅgeyaka contemporary of Samudragupta (see above, Ind. Cult., I, p. 493 ff.; also Ind. Hist. Quart, IX, p. 212 and Journ. Ind. Hist., XIII, p. 37). He therefore appears to have reigned about the first quarter of the fourth century.

We have already shown that the word vijaya, in names like vijaya-Skandavarman, is not an integral part of the name, but is a simple honorific.¹ The name of the Pallava king mentioned in the British Museum grant therefore is Skandavarman. Some scholars think that the word śiva in the name of Śiva-skandavarman, is also an honorific like viṣaya in the other names and that the Pallava prince śiva-Skandavarman of the Mayidavolu and Hirahadagalli grants is identical with king viṣaya-Skandavarman of the British Museum grant. The absence of any king named Sivaskandavarman and the existence of many Skandavarman in the traditional list of early Pallava kings, and also the use of the word śiva, in the Kadamba inscriptions, as an honorific in names like viṣaya-śiva-Māndhātṛvarman, viṣaya-śiva-Mṛgeśavarman and viṣaya-śiva-Kṛṣṇavarman (II), may be taken as proofs in support of this theory. It must however be noticed that there is not even a single instance where the word śiva is singly used as an honorific. It may be argued that śiva in the names of Sivaskandanāgaśrī of the Banavasi inscription (Lüders, List, No. 1124) and Sivaskandavarman of the Malavalli inscription (ibid, No. 1196) is only an honorific compounded with the names. These persons belonged to royal families. But Sivaskandagupta is the name of an ordinary person in the Karle inscription No. 19 (ibid, No. 1105) and Sivaskandila (Sivaskandanāga?) is that of an ordinary officer in a Nasik inscription of Pulumāvi (ibid, No. 1124). Since honorifics are not known to have been used by ordinary persons, it is clear that Sivaskandavarman was certainly not an improper name in ancient India. The name of Sivaskanda Śātakarṇi in the Purāṇic list of the Andhra (Śātavāhana) kings, where no other king's name is mentioned with an honorific, is also in support of this suggestion. The name of the Brāhmaṇa Bhavaskandatrāta in the Chendalur grant is also to be noticed in this connection. Since the traditional list of early Pallava kings is of very doubtful authority, we can hardly make out anything from the non-mention of Sivaskandavarman in it. The identification of Sivaskandavarman of the Mayidavolu and Hirahadagalli grants with Skandavarman of the British Museum grant is therefore extremely doubtful.

As the British Museum grant is also written in Prakrit a linguistic consideration may be useful in ascertaining its date. This grant expresses double-consonants, in all cases, by more than one letter, and generally follows the spelling accepted in literary Prakrit. It has moreover the usual imprecatory verses in Sanskrit. There can therefore be hardly any doubt that the British Museum grant is later than the grants of Śivaskandavarman. Skandavarman seems to have been a successor of Śivaskandavarman.

Such linguistic considerations have led us to believe that the Pallava kings of the Prakrit records, Śālaṅkāyana Devavarman of the Ellore grant, Kadamba Mayūraśarman of the Chandravalli inscription (Mys. Arc. Surv., A. R., 1929, p. 50), the Kadamba king of the Malavalli record (Ep. Carn., VII, Sk., No. 264), Viṇhukadḍa Śātakaṛṇi of another Malavalli record (ibid, No. 263)¹ and Brhatphalāyana Jayavarman of the Kondamudi grant² may all be placed roughly between about the beginning and the middle of the fourth century.

² The difference in palaeography between the Kondamudi plates and the seal attached to them may be taken to suggest that Jayavarman ruled a little earlier than the time suggested by the linguistic standard of the Kondamudi grant. But as has already been noticed, the legend on the seal which is in Sanskrit cannot be much earlier than 300 A.D.

EARLY PALLAVA GENEALOGY FROM INSCRIPTIONS OF THE NELLORE-GUNTUR REGION

Some Sanskrit records of the Early Pallavas have been found in the Nellore and Guntur districts, which at one time formed the Northern part of the kingdom of Kāñcī. The Pallava genealogy constructed from these records cannot be quite easily and satisfactorily assimilated into the traditional list of early Pallava kings found in later records. The Pallava kings mentioned in these northern inscriptions, moreover, can scarcely be identified without difficulty with the Pallava princes mentioned in the inscriptions of the rulers of Kāñcī. Whether they ruled over Kāñcī proper is also not definitely known. It is therefore convenient to discuss the Early Pallavas of the northern records separately.

The Omgodu grant, No. 1 (Ep. Ind., XV, p. 246), issued from the sthāna or city of Tambrāpa in the 33rd year of king Skandavarman, furnishes us with the following list of kings :

1. Mahārāja Kumāraviṣṇu; his son
2. Mahārāja Skandavarman (I); his son
3. Vīravarman; his son
4. Mahārāja śrī-vijaya-Skandavarman (II).

Next we come to the Uruvupalli grant (Ind. Ant., V, p. 50) of prince Viṣṇugopavarman, issued from the sthāna of Palakkāḍa, in the 11th year of Mahārāja Simhavarman. Here we get the following names :

1. Mahārāja Skandavarman (I); his son
2. Mahārāja Vīravarman; his son
3. Mahārāja Skandavarman (II) ; his son
4. Yuvamahārāja Viṣṇugopavarman.

There can be no doubt that prince Viṣṇugopavarman, issuer of the Uruvupalli grant, was the son of king Skandavarman II who issued the Omgodu grant No. 1. There is however difference of opinion as regards the identification of king Simhavarman in whose reign the grant of the prince was issued. According to Fleet, Mahārāja Simhavarman was possibly an elder brother of the Yuvamahārāja Viṣṇugopa. According to Hultzsch however king Simhavarman of the Uruvupalli grant is the same as Viṣṇugopa's son Simhavarman who issued the Omgodu (No. 2), Pikira and Mangalur grants. "The term Yuvarāja or Yuvamahārāja which is prefixed to Viṣṇugopa not only in his Uruvupalli grant, but in the two grants of his son Simhavarman, suggests that he never ascended the throne, but that the succession passed from his father Skandavarman II to his son Simhavarman. The reason of this need not have been premature death. If it is assumed that Viṣṇugopa declined to take up the reins of government or was prevented from doing so by some other reason unknown he may well have been alive during the reign of his son Simhavarman to whose eleventh year I would assign—lāghavāt as an Indian philosopher will say—the Uruvupalli grant" (Ep. Ind., VIII, pp. 160-61).

Three inscriptions of Viṣṇugopa's son Simhavarman have as yet been discovered. They are the Omgodu (No. 2) grant issued in his fourth year from a vijaya-skandhāvāra (Ep. Ind., XV, 246), the Pikira grant issued in his fifth year from the vijaya-skandhāvāra of Memātura-vāsaka (ibid., VIII, p. 159 ff.) and the Mangalur grant issued in his eighth year from Daśanapura (Ind. Ant., V, p. 154). They give us the following genealogical list .

1. Mahārāja Vīravarman; his son
2. Mahārāja Skandavarman (II); his son

3. Yuvamahārāja Viṣṇugopa; his son
4. Dharma-mahārāja ¹ Simhavarman.

Next we come to the fragmentary Darsi record (Ep. Ind., I, p. 397). The only information we get from this inscription is that it was issued from the adhiṣṭhāna (city or capital) of Daśanapura by the great-grandson of a Pallava king named Virakorcavarman. The form vīrakorca (cf. Virakūrcavarman of later grants) shows considerable Prakrit influence which proves that the grant belongs to the period immediately following the age of the Prakrit grants. We have already noticed that the Prakrit records of the Pallavas are not written in the early inscriptional Prakrit and that they have in them passages and verses couched in Sanskrit. It must also be noticed that the Omgodu grant (No. 1) of king Skandavarman II is dated in his 33rd regnal year, on the 13th tithi of the third fortnight of Hemanta. This is an old form of dating used in almost all Prakrit inscriptions. Like the Darsi grant, therefore, the Omgodu grant (No. 1) also seems to have belonged to the same period, i. e., the early Sanskrit period. Sanskrit grants showing considerable Prakrit influence appear to me not much later than the beginning of the fifth century A.D. They may be roughly placed between the middle of the fourth and the beginning of the fifth century.²

It is possible that the great-grandson of Vīrakocavarman, who issued the Darsi grant, was a predecessor of king Skandavarman II. Consequently, Vīrakocavarman, great-grandfather of the issuer of the Darsi grant, was probably a predecessor of Kumāraviṣṇu, great-grandfather of the issuer of the Omgodu grant (No. 1).

We have now to consider the seventh and last of the Sanskrit grants so far discovered in the Nellore-Guntur region. It is the Narasaraopet record (commonly called the Chura grant), issued from the camp at Pālotkaṭa (= Palakkāḍa) during the reign of viṣaya-Viṣṇugopāvarman (II), son of Siṃhavarman, grandson of Mahārāja Viṣṇugopavarman (I) and great-grandson of Kandavarman (i.e., Skandavarman). See An. Rep. S. Ind. Ep., 1914, pp. 10 and 82. The grant is not dated; its language is Sanskrit and the alphabet used is Telugu. It registers the king's grant of the village of Curā in the Karmarāṣṭra to a Brāhmaṇa named Casamiśarman who belonged to the Kāśyapa gotra and was an inhabitant of Kuṇḍur.¹

The fact that the first three names of the Narasaraopet list, viz., (1) Kandavarman (i.e., Skandavarman), (2) Viṣṇugopavarman (I) and (3) Siṃhavarman, are found exactly in the same order in the Omgodu (No. 2), Pikira and Mangalur grants of Siṃhavarman makes it almost certain that Viṣṇugopavarman II of the Narasaraopet grant was a son and successor of the issuer of the above three grants. Two points however have been advanced (ibid, 82) against the possibility of this identification. First, it has been said that the characters in which the Narasaraopet record is engraved are comparatively more modern than those used in the grants of Siṃhavarman. Secondly, it is argued that in the Uruvupalli, Omgodu (No. 2), Pikira and Mangalur grants, the son of Skandavarman and father of Simhavarman has been mentioned as a Yuvarāja or Yuvamahārāja, while in the Narasaraopet grant Viṣṇugopavarman I is called a Mahārāja. It has therefore been observed that Viṣṇugopavarman II of the Narasaraopet grant "must be a later king and very probably one of the missing group immediately preceding the line of Simhavarman and Simhavishṇu whose history is pretty certain" (loc. cit.). The grant has been assigned to the beginning of the 7th century A.D.

In connection with the first point however we should notice the fact that the characters used in the Omgodu grant (No. 2) of Simhavarman, son of Viṣṇugopavarman (I), are remarkably similar to those of the Narasaraopet grant of Viṣṇugopavarman II. Krishnasastri therefore thought that the Omgodu grant (No. 2) "must have been a copy of a grant of the 5th-6th century A.D., put into writing in the seventh century, though no direct evidence, external or internal, is to be found on this point from the wording of the grant itself. The numerous mistakes made by the engraver may possibly point to this conclusion" (Ep. Ind., XV, p. 252). If the Omgodu grant (No. 2) is believed to have been an early record copied about the beginning of the 7th century A.D., what is the objection if we think that the Narasaraopet grant was also an early inscription likewise copied about the same time?

As for the second point, it may be said that the epithet Mahārāja applied to Viṣṇugopavarman I in the Narasaraopet grant, which should properly be Yuvamahārāja, may be a mistake due to the engraver's inattention. The possibility of such a mistake becomes greater, if we believe that the Narasaraopet record is an early grant copied years after like the Omgodu grant No. 2, about the beginning of the 7th century A.D.

From the seven Sanskrit copper-plate grants, therefore, the following genealogical list of the early Pallava kings may be prepared :

1. Mahārāja Vīrakorcavarman (Darsi grant); his successor (?)

2. Mahārāja Kumāraviṣṇu; his son

3. Mahārāja Skandavarman (I); his son

4. Mahārāja Vīravarman; his son

5. Mahārāja Skandavarman (II); issued the Omgodu grant No. 1 in his 33rd year; his son

5A. Mahārāja Siṃhavarman (I ?); he is according to Fleet the Pallava king referred to in the Uruvupalli grant; his existence however is doubtful;

5B. Yuvamahārāja Viṣṇugopavarman (I); issued the Uruvupalli grant; did not rule as Mahārāja; seems to have been wrongly called Mahārāja in the Narasaraopet grant; his son

6. Mahārāja Siṃhavarman (II ?); issued the Omgodu No. 2, Pikira and Mangalur grants respectively in his 4th, 5th and 8th years; his son

7. Mahārāja Viṣṇugopavarman (II); issued the Narasaraopet grant.

GENEALOGY AND CHRONOLOGY OF THE EARLY PALLAVAS OF Kāñcī

We do not know whether the Pallava kings discussed in the last section ruled over the whole of the kingdom of Kāñcī. It is however probable that some one of the princes of the Pallava house of Kāñcī, who was originally made a viceroy of the northern part of the Pallava kingdom by the king of Kāñcī, carved out a separate principality in that part independent of his overlord. If this suggestion is to be believed, the kings of the main line of the Pallavas appear to have been ruling at Kāñcī side by side with the branch line that was ruling in the Northern part of the old Kāñcī kingdom. Here we shall try to see what we know about the history of Kāñcī after the time of the Pallava kings of the Prakrit grants.

We have seen that Kāñcī was under a Pallava king about the fourth quarter of the third century A.D. That king was succeeded by his son Sivaskandavarman who ruled about the first quarter of the fourth century A. D. He may have been succeeded by a king named Skandavarman. In the British Museum grant of the time of Skandavarman, there is mention of the Pallava Yuvamahārāja Buddhavarman and of the Yuvamahārāja's son whose name has been doubtfully read as Buddhyānkura. It is not known whether this king ruled at Kāñcī and whether the crown-prince Buddhavarman and his son ever ascended the throne.

In an attempt to fix the date of the Early Pallava kings of Kāñcī, we are fortunate to have at least three points whereon we can stand with confidence,

(i) The first of these points is supplied by the Jain work, Lokavibhāga (Mys. Arch. Surv., A.R., 1909 & 1910), where the precise date of the completion of the work is given as the 22nd year of Simhavarman, lord of the Pallavas, and as 80 beyond 300 years of the Śaka era. The 22nd year of a Pallava king named Simhavarman therefore comes to be equivalent to Śaka 380, i.e., A.D. 458. According to S. Jha the date given in the Lokavibhāga corresponds to the 1st of March, 458; but according to Fleet to the 25th August, 458. Any way, the 22nd year of the Pallava king Simhavarman corresponds to A.D. 458. He therefore began to reign in $(458 - 21 =)$ A.D. 436-37 (Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 334).

(ii) The second point of importance is furnished by the Penukonda plates of the Gaṅga king Mādhava (ibid, p. 331 ff.) which, according to Fleet, are to be assigned, on palaeographical grounds, to about A.D. 475. It may be noticed here that the characters of this epigraph are remarkably similar to that of the epigraphs of the Śālaṅkāyana king Nandivarman II (e.g., the Peddavegi grant; Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., I, p. 92ff.) whom I have placed about the middle of the fifth century A.D. (above, p. 73; Ind. Hist. Quart., IX, 208ff.). The Penukonda grant was issued by the Gaṅga king Mādhava-Simhavarman, son of Āyyavarman, grandson of Mādhava and great-grandson of Konkanivarman. But the greatest point of historical importance in this inscription is that it tells us of Mādhava-Simhavarman being installed on the throne by the Pallava king Skandavarman and his father Āyyavarman being installed by the Pallava king Simhavarman. We have seen that Fleet ascribes the Penukonda plates to circa 475 A.D. It is therefore almost certain that the Pallava king Simhavarman who installed Āyyavarman, father of the Gaṅga king Mādhava-Simhavarman of the Penukonda plates, is identical with the Pallava king Simhavarman who, according to the Lokaribhāga, began to rule in A.D. 436-37.

(iii) The third point of importance is supplied by the Allahabad pillar inscription of Samudragupta, which refers to the Gupta king's conflict with a certain Kāñceyaka Viṣṇugopa. This "Viṣṇugopa of Kāñcī" has been taken by all scholars to have belonged to the family of the Pallavas. Samudragupta is believed to have reigned from circa 330 to 375 A.D. This dating appears possible from the facts that his father Candragupta I began to rule in A.D. 320¹ and that the earliest date of his son Candragupta II, according to the Mathura inscription (Ep. Ind., XXI, p. 1 ff.), is (Gupta 61+320=) 381 A.D. Since it is proved from the Prakrit records that the Pallavas were master of the kingdom of Kāñcī during the first half of the fourth century A.D., it is almost certain that Kāñceyaka Viṣṇugopa of the Allahabad pillar inscription was a Pallava king who ruled in the middle of that century which is the time of Samudragupta's South Indian campaign.

Let us now see whether these three Pallava kings—Simhavarman, Skandavarman and Viṣṇugopa, whose date is fairly correct—can be found in the epigraphs of the Pallavas themselves. The evidence of the Penukonda plates recording the installation of two consecutive Gaṅga kings—Āyyavarman, and his son Mādhava-Simhavarman who seems to have been named after his father's overlord—by the Pallava kings, Simhavarman and Skandavarman, renders it most likely that the Pallava king Simhavarman was the father and immediate predecessor of Skandavarman. It is very interesting in this connection to note that the Udayendiram grant (No 1) of Nandivarman (Ep. Ind., III, p. 142) issued from Kāñcīpura, is the only known Pallava record, where in we find a Pallava king named Siṅghavarman (Siṃhavarman) succeeded by his son Skandavarman. The genealogy given in this record is :

1. Skandavarman (I) ; his son
2. Siṅghavarman ; his son
3. Skandavarman (II) ; his son
4. Nandivarman.

These four kings are mentioned exactly in the same order in the Vayalur grant of Rājasiṃha (ibid., XVIII, p. 150 ; see Nos. 41-44), though the relation of one with the others is not specified there. We are therefore inclined to identify the Pallava king Siṃhavarman of the Lokavibhāga and the Penukonda plates and Skandavarman of the latter, with respectively the second and the third king of the above list.

Beside the Udayendiram grant, there is another Sanskrit grant belonging to the early Pallava rulers of Kāñcī. This is the Chendalur grant of Kumāraviṣṇu II (ibid., VIII, p. 233ff.) issued from Kāñcīpura in the king's second regnal year. The grant supplies us with the following line of kings :

1. Mahārāja Skandavarman ; his son
2. Mahārāja Kumāraviṣṇu (I) ; his son
3. Mahārāja Buddhavarman ; his son
4. Mahārāja Kumāraviṣṇu (II) ; 2nd year.

According to Hultzsch (ibid., p. 334), " The alphabet of the Chendalur plates is more archaic than those of the Kūram and Kāśakudi plates, but resembles those of the Pīkira, Maṅgalūr and Uruvupalli grants, from which it differs chiefly in the omission of horizontal strokes at the top of letters. But a point which stamp it as more modern is the fact that r, k, and subscribed u consist of two vertical lines of nearly equal length, while in the Pīkira, Maṅgalūr and Uruvupalli grants the left line is still considerably shorter. Hence we may conclude that the four Pallava kings of the Chendalur plates ruled in the interval between Siṃhavarman (of the Omgodu No. 2, Pikira and Mangalur grants) and Siṃhaviṣṇu (father of Mahendravarman I, acc. circa 600 A.D.)."

We have already seen that Siṃhavarman, the second of the four kings mentioned in the Udayendiram grant, ruled from A.D. 436-37 to not earlier than A.D. 458. Thus his father Skandavarman I appears to have ruled at Kāñcī about the first quarter of the fifth century, and his grandson Nandivarman seems to have ended his rule about the beginning of the sixth century A.D. The accession of Mahendravarman I to the throne of Kāñcī is supposed to have taken place about the end of the same century, owing to his being an older contemporary of the Western Calukya king Pulakeśin II (A.D. 609-642). Mahendravarman I was preceded by his father Siṃhaviṣṇu and grandfather Siṃhavarman (see verses 10-11 of the Velurpalaiyam grant ; S. Ind. Ins., Vol. II, p. 363). Between Nandivarman, the issuer of the Udayendiram grant, who seems to have ruled up to the beginning of the sixth century and Siṃhavarman, grandfather of Mahendravarman I, the Vayalur record places three kings named (1) Siṃhavarman, (2) Siṃhavarman and (3) Viṣṇugopa. The Vayalur grant thus places five kings between Nandivarman and Mahendravarman I, i.e., in the sixth century A.D. roughly. Since the rule of five kings covering about a century does not appear impossible, since the existence of four earlier kings (Nos. 41-44 of the Vayalur list) has been proved by the Udayendiram grant and since it is possible that the Greater Pallavas of the line of Mahendravarman I did not forget even their immediate predecessors, the three kings (Nos. 45-47) placed by the Vayalur record between Nandivarman and Mahendravarman's grandfather may be historical persons, though we have as yet no corroborative proof of their existence. We therefore think that the four kings of Kāñcī mentioned in the Chendalur grant ruled before the kings of the Udayendiram grant. The kings of the Chendalur record however appear to have ruled after Viṣṇugopa who came into conflict with Samudragupta in the middle of the fourth century A.D. We have already seen that, in the first half of the fourth century, Kāñcī was occupied by the Pallava kings who issued the Prakrit charters.

There are references to some Pallava rulers in the inscriptions of the Kadambas. An epigraph of the Kadamba king Ravivarman (Ind. Ant., VI, p. 29) mentions Caṇḍadaṇḍa, the lord of Kāñcī, who was defeated by the Kadamba monarch. Caṇḍadaṇḍa¹ is evidently not the name but a biruda of the Pallava ruler of Kāñcī who fought with Ravivarman. He cannot be satisfactorily identified with any king of the traditional list of early Pallava kings. His contemporary, the Kadamba king Ravivarman appears to have ruled about the end of the fifth and the beginning of the sixth century (500-537 A.D. according to Dubreuil, op. cit., p. 95). The Anaji inscription (Ep. Carn., XI, p. 142) mentions a Pallava king whose name has been read as Naṇakkāsa and who was possibly a contemporary of the Kadamba king Kṛṣṇavarman I who ruled about the middle of the fifth century. But the reading of the name Naṇakkāsa is doubtful.² Another Pallava king named Sāntivara[varman, i.e., Sāntivarman] has been mentioned in the Hebbata plates (Mys. Arch. Surv., A.R., 1925, p. 98) of the Kadamba king Viṣṇuvarman. This Pallava king is supposed by some (see infra) to be also mentioned in the Birur plates (Ep. Carn., VI, p. 91). But he cannot be satisfactorily identified with any of the Pallava kings known from the traditional list. It must also be noticed that excepting Caṇḍaṇḍa none of these kings is expressly said to have ruled at Kāñcī.

² In Journ. Ind. Hist., XIII, p. 22 note, it has been suggested that the reading of the passage would be sva-deśa ksayena niṣkāṣita. If this reading is to be accepted, the name of the Pallava king referred to in the Anaji inscription is not as yet known.

We thus come to know of the following early Pallava kings who appear to have ruled at Kāñcī before the rise of the Greater Pallavas of Mahendravarman's line :

1. Father of Sivaskandavarman; about the end of the third century A.D., his son.

2. Sivaskandavarman; about the beginning of the fourth century; issued the Prakrit grants discovered at Mayidavolu and Hirahadagalli.

3. Skandavarman; the British Museum grant was issued in his reign; he is not definitely known to have ruled at Kāñcī; he may have been an early member of the branch line of the Nellore-Guntur region.

4. Viṣṇugopa; came into conflict with Samudragupta (circa 330-375 A.D.) about the middle of the fourth century A.D.

5. Skandavarman; his son

6. Kumāraviṣṇu I;¹ his son

¹ May this Kumāraviṣṇu I be identical with Kumāraviṣṇu, great-grandfather of the issuer of the Omgodu grant No 1? The first difficulty in this identification is that Kumāraviṣṇu of the Omgodu (No 1) grant has been called a performer of the Aśvamedha sacrifice, while the Chendalur grant does not credit Kumāraviṣṇu I with any such distinction. It is also striking that only in the grants of the descendants of Kumāraviṣṇu of the Omgodu (No 1) grant the Pallava family is called "purified by the Aśvamedha". The above tentative identification is therefore extremely doubtful. Another difficulty is that while according to the Chendalur grant Kumāraviṣṇu I was succeeded by his son Buddhavarman and grandson Kumāraviṣṇu II, according to the Omgodu grant (No 1) Kumāraviṣṇu was succeeded by his son Skandavarman I, grandson Viṭavarman and great-grandson Skandavarman II. But in this connection we

7. Buddhavarman ; his son

8. Kumāraviṣṇu II ; issued the Chendalur grant.

9. Skandavarman (I) ; his son

10. Simhavarman ; he ascended the throne in A.D. 436-37 and ruled at least up to A.D. 458 ; his son

11. Skandavarman (II) ; his son

12. Nandivarman ; issued the Udayēndiram grant.

13. Caṇḍadaṇḍa, who came into conflict with the Kadamba king Ravivarman about the first quarter of the sixth century. Caṇḍadaṇḍa may have been the biruda of No. 12 or possibly of one of his three successors mentioned in the Vayalur grant (Nos. 45-47).

14. Simhavarman ; ¹ his son

16. Mahendravarman I ; ascended the throne about A.D. 600.

may notice that the Vayalur record places a Skandavarman between Buddhavarman and Kumāraviṣṇu II and it may be conjectured that this Skandavarman was a son of Kumāraviṣṇu I, who was made a viceroy of the northern part of the Pallava kingdom and eventually carved out a principality there. In the Omgodu grant No. 1 Skandavarman I, son of Kumāraviṣṇu, has been called sva-vīry ādhigata-rājya, which epithet may support the above suggestion.

SIVASKANDAVARMAN AND SKANDAVARMAN

The earliest known Pallava king is Sivaskandavarman who issued the Mayidavolu and Hirahadagalli grants. In the latter grant Sivaskandavarman refers to his father as Mahārāja¹-bappasāmi. Bühler (Ep. Ind., I, p. 8, note 15) and following him many other scholars think that Bappa is probably the name of Sivaskandavarman's father ; and in this connection Fleet's article in Ind. Ant., XV, p. 272, is referred to. Bappa of course may signify a personal name as we find this name in the list of recipients of the gift recorded in the Hirahadagalli grant itself.² We must however remember that in many early copper-plate grants including some belonging to the Pallavas, the kings called themselves bappabhaṭṭāraka-pāda-bhakta, "devoted to the feet of the lord, the father." The word bappa there means "father" and cannot be a personal name, as the fathers of those kings are definitely known to have borne names having no connection with the word bappa. It must also be noted that the traditional lists of early Pallava kings do not mention any name even slightly resembling Bappa. Bappa therefore cannot be taken as the name of Śivaskandavarman's father without further evidence.

At the time of Śivaskandavarman the Pallava kingdom of Kāñcī certainly included the Andhra country in the north and the Bellary district in the north-west. From the Penukonda plates of the Gaṅga king Mādhava we know that about the middle of the fifth century the Gaṅgas of Mysore acknowledged the suzerainty of the Pallavas of Kāñcī. It is possible that this region was under the Pallavas as early as the time of Śivaskandavarman who was the most powerful king among the early Pallavas. This suggestion seems to be supported by the Talgunda inscription according to which the early Kadambas of Banavāṣī (a place to the west of Mysore) also acknowledged Pallava supremacy.¹ Mayūraśarman, the first king of the Kadamba family, is there said to have been installed by the Pallava king of Kāñcī. According to the Talgunda inscription (Ep. Ind., VIII, p. 31 ff.) Mayūraśarman received the paṭṭabandha-sampūjā as well as the land between the western sea and the Prehāra from the Pallava king of Kāñcī (cf. samśritas = tadā mahīpālān = ārādhyā yuddhyeṣu vikramaiḥ prāpa paṭṭabandha-sampūjām karapallavaiḥ pallavar = dhrtām, bhaṅgur-ormmi-valgitair = nṛtyad-aparāṇav-āmbhaḥ-kṛtāvadhīm prehārān-tām = ananya-saṅcaraṇa-samaya-sthitām bhūmim = eva ca). This Mayūraśarman cannot be placed long after Śivaskandavarman. We have seen that Śivaskandavarman ruled in the beginning of the fourth century, while scholars place Mayūraśarman about the middle of the same century (Anc. Hist. Dec., pp. 95-96; Kadambakula, p. 19). Indeed the Prakrit language of the Chandravalli inscription of Mayūraśarman (Mys. Arch. Surv., A.R., 1929, p. 50) shows that this Kadamba king ruled a little later than the accession of Śivaskandavarman. The use of ś (1.1) and the numerous double consonants like mm (1, 1), tr, ll (1, 2), sth, nd (1, 3), etc., appears to prove that the Chandravalli inscription was engraved some time after the execution of the Mayīdavolu and Hirahadagalli grants of Śivaskandavarman. He can therefore be rightly placed about the middle of the fourth century. A.D.

I. The Mayīdavolu grant was issued from Kāncīpura by the Pallava Yuvamahārāja Sivakhaṇḍavamma (= Śivaskandavarman) on the fifth lunar day of the sixth fortnight of summer in the tenth year of the reigning Pallava king who was almost certainly the father of the Yuvamahārāja, but whose name is not mentioned in the grant. By this grant the Pallava crown-prince, for the increase of his victory, religious merit and strength, offered with libation of water, the village of Viripāra situated in the Aṃdhāpata (= Andhrāpatha) to two Brāhmaṇas, Puvakeṭuja and Gonamdija, who belonged to the Agniveśya gotra. The executor of the grant was Śivaskandavarman himself, and the order was accordingly sent to the vāpata (vyāpṛta), i.e., governor, of Dhamñakada (Dhānyakataka). Dhamñakada which has been identified by different scholars with Dharanīkoṭa, Amarāvatī, Bezvāḍa and Nāgarjunikoṇḍa, was evidently the headquarters of the Andhra province incorporated in the Pallava kingdom. To the village of Viripāra were granted all the immunities enjoyed by the Brahmadeyas.¹ The word brahmadeya therefore means not only “a deya (grant) to Brāhmanas,” but like the technical terms brahmatrā, devatrā, devasāt, etc., signifies a religious donation which implied certain immunities. Of the immunities or parihāras, the following only are specified in the Mayidavolu grant :—(1) a-loṇa-khādaka, (2) a-raṭha-saṃvinayika, (3) a-paramparā-balivadhā, (4) a-bhada-pavesa, and (5) a-kūra-colaka-vināsi-khātā-saṃvāsa.

A-loṇa-khādaka is, as already noticed, Sanskrit a-lavaṇa-khātaka; by this immunity the grantor gave up the royal right of digging salt in the village granted. About the next parihāra Senart says (Ep. Ind., VI, p. 68), “The word seems to represent arāshṭrasaṃvinayika, but etymology alone is an unsafe guide in the interpretation of technical terms. Vineti is only used in a moral sense. Could we think of translating ‘exempted from the police, the magistrate of the district (rāshṭra; compare Dr. Fleet’s Gupta Inscriptions, p. 32 note), or of a rāshṭrin?’ This would remind us of those grants in which, on the other hand, it is stated that the right to punish the ‘ten offences’ (sadaśāparādha; see, e.g., the Alina plates; 1.67 in Dr. Fleet’s Gupta Inscriptions, p. 179 and the Deo-Baranārka inscription, 1.17; ibid., p. 217) is transferred to the donee.” A-paramparā-balivadhā has been called a-paramparā-balivadda-gahana in the Hirahadagalli grant and has been translated by Bühler as “free from the taking of the oxen in succession.” This parihāra seems to suggest that the villagers had to supply bullocks for the bullock-carts used by royal officers when the latter went on tour through the country. A-bhaḍa-pavesa, as we have already noticed, implies that no troops would enter the village of Viripāra and cause disturbances. Battles therefore could not be fought on the fields of this village. The next parihāra is very important. According to Hultsch, kūra means "boiled rice" and colaka (collaka of the Hira-hadagalli grant) is the same as cullakī, i.e., pot. The word vināsi has not as yet been explained. Possibly it means "fuel." The words khaṭā and saṃvāsa, respectively, mean "cot" and "dwelling." This parihāra then implies exemption from the obligation of supplying boiled rice, water-pots, vināsi, cots and dwellings to the officers who visited the place. In this connection it is interesting to note the views of Manu (VII, 115-119). According to this law-giver, the king must appoint a headman called grāmika over each village, a daśin or daś-eśa over each unit of ten villages, a vimśat-īśa over each unit of twenty villages, a śat-eśa over each unit of hundred villages and a sahasr-ādhipati over each unit of thousand villages. As remuneration, the head of thousand villages should enjoy a city, that of hundred villages a village, that of twenty villages five kulas of land, that of ten villages one kula (= kulyavāpa = Bengali kuṛobā, i.e., Bighā?) of land, but

anna-pān-endhan-ādīni grāmikas = tān = avāpnūyāt.*

"The headman of the village should get all of what is daily payable by the villagers to the king in the shape of food (anna), drink (pāna) fuel and other things (indhan-ādī)." By the above parihāra then the village would appear to have been exempted from its dues to the grāmika. But khaṭvā (cot) and saṃvāsa (dwelling) should possibly have been required by officers who came to the village on tour, the grāmika being probably more or less a settled inhabitant of the village. In connection with this parihāra we must also refer to line 8 of the Kudgere grant of Kadamba Māndhātṛvarman (Ep. Ind., VI, p. 12) where the immunity is mentioned as a-khaṭvā-vās-audana, “exempt from (the duty of providing) cots, abodes and boiled rice.”¹

The villagers of Viripāra and the royal officials are asked to exempt the village and to cause it to be exempted with all the above parihāras. It is also said that one who would transgress the royal edict and would give or cause to be given any trouble or annoyance to the donees, on him the royal authority should inflict bodily punishment.

The ends of the ring that holds the plates together are secure in an elliptical seal which bears in relief “an animal couchant and facing the proper right—apparently a bull,² as it has a hump on its back—and below it the legend śivaska(nda)varmaṇaḥ (?) in an alphabet which appears to be slightly different from that of the inscription” (ibid., p. 84). The seals seem to have been kept ready in the record-office and were attached to a set of copper-plates when the latter was prepared.

At the beginning of the Mayidavolu grant, there is the word diṭham, i.e., “has been seen,” exactly as on the last plate of the Hirahadagalli grant. This possibly refers to

II. Hirabadagallı is a place near the western border of the Bellary district of the Madras Presidency. The copper-plate grant discovered there was issued from Kāmcīpura on the fifth day of the sixth fortnight of rainy season in the 8th year of the Pallava Dharma-mahārājādhirāja Śivaskandavarman who is said to have belonged to the Bhāradvāja gotra and is credited with the performance of the Agniṣṭoma, Vājapeya and Aśvamedha sacrifices. As we have already suggested, the celebration of Aśvamedha by Śivaskandavarman seems to speak of the success of the Pallavas against the Ikṣvākus and other neighbouring powers. By this record the king granted a garden situated in the southern boundary of a village called Cillarekakoḍumka as a parihāra, i.e., an honorific grant (see Manusamhitā, VII, 201). Two nivartanas of land were also granted in a village called Āpiṭṭi, one for a threshing floor and the other for a house, along with four Addhikās and two Kolikās. The grant was made in favour of a number of Brāhmaṇas, the chief among whom was Agisamaja (=Agniśarmāya). Addhikā (=ārdhika), according to Bühler, is "a labourer receiving half the produce." It has been referred to in the Ellore grant of Śālaṅkāyana Devavarman as addhiya-manussa (see also Mitākṣarā on Yājñavalkya, I 166). Kolikā, as Bühler says (Ep. Ind., I, p. 9, note), "corresponds to Sanskrit Kaulikāḥ and may mean 'weavers.' But it is also possible to think of the well-known tribe of the Kolis who are slaves."

The village of Cillarekakoḍumka, as also possibly Āpiṭṭi, was situated in the Sātāhani-raṭṭha (Sātavāhaniya-rāṣṭra) which is evidently the same as Sātavāhani-hāra mentioned in the Myakadoni inscription of Pulumāvi (ibid., XIV, p. 153) and corresponds roughly to the present Bellary district. The garden of Cillarekakoḍumka is said to have been originally granted by Śivaskandavarman's father. This part of the old Śātavāhana empire was therefore occupied by the Pallavas as early as the time of that king, that is to say, before circa 300 A.D.

The following officials, employed in the different parts of the viśaya, have been mentioned in connection with the observance of immunities: (1) Rājakumāra, (2) Senāpati, (3) Raṭṭhika, (4) Māḍavika, (5) Desādhikata, (6) Gāmāgāmabhojaka, (7) Vallava, (8) Govallava, (9) Amacca, (10) Ārakhādhikata, (11) Gumika, (12) Tūthika and (13) Neyika. Along with these are also mentioned (14) the Samcarantakas and (15) the Bhaḍamanusas who might be sent by the king to the villages in order to execute any commission (ahma-pesanap-payutta). Rājakumāra seems to refer to princes who possibly acted as viceroys of the king. Senāpati is obviously "leader of the army." The word raṭṭhika is equivalent to Sanskrit rāṣṭrika, i.e., governor of a rāṣṭra. As regards the next term, Buhler says (ibid, I, p. 7, note), "I consider the correction māṇḍavika as certain and take the word maṇḍaba or maṇḍapa, from which it has been derived, in the sense of modern māṇḍavī, 'custom-house.'" Leumann however thinks that māḍavika is the same as māḍambika, i.e., "chief of a māḍamba district," and Raychaudhuri translates it as "burgomaster" Desādhikata (= deśādhikṛta) is "ruler of a deśa." Gāmāgāmabhojaka has been translated by Bühler as "freeholders of various villages." This meaning of the word bhojaka is supported by its use in line 8 of the Hirahadagalli grant itself where the donees are called cillarekakodumka-bhojaka. In justifying the form gāmāgāmabhojaka, Fausboll points out that repetitions of the same word with a lengthening of the final vowel of the first are commonly used in Pali in order to indicate vīpsā (loc. cit., p. 7, note). According to Amara, the word vallava means gopa which is obviously the same as go-vallava of this inscription. Vallava therefore seems to be the same as vallabha which is so common in early South Indian inscriptions and is according to Jaṭādhara, the same as aśva-rakṣa (keeper of horses). Bühler has translated the two terms as "herdsmen" and "cowherds" respectively. Amacca is evidently the same as Sanskrit amātya, "minister." Leumann thinks that ārakhādhikata (= ārakṣādhikṛta) means "employed as a guard." Bühler however read the word as āraṇādhikata and translated it as "foresters." Gumika (= gaulmika) is evidently "head of a gulma (outpost of soldiers)." According to Manu (VII, V, 114), a king must place a gulma in the centre of two, three, five or hundred villages in order to protect his kingdom (see also Manu, VII, 190; and Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 155). According to Bühler, Tūthika may be connected with Prakrit tūha, "tīrtha," and possibly means "overseers of fords or of bathing places." With neyika may be compared the word naiyyoka of the Uruvupalli grant, which Fleet changed to niyukta (Ind. Ant., V, p. 52). Bühler thinks that naiyyoka is a mistake for naiyika, which would exactly correspond to neyika, and that both the terms are corruptions of Sanskrit nāyaka, which is commonly pronounced naieka and seems to mean a military officer of the rank of corporal or sergeant (Ep. Ind., I, p. 8, note 13). It however seems to me that neither Fleet nor Bühler is justified in the interpretation of neyika. Naiyyoka of the Uruvupalli grant is evidently a mistake for naiyogika which word we find in the Chendalur grant of Kumāraviṣṇu II (ibid., VIII, p. 233). The word is derived from niyoga and is evidently the same as niyogin which, according to Hemachandra, is synonymous with karmasaciva, āyukta and vyāpṛta. A vyāpṛta is known from the Kondamudi grant to have been ruler of an āhāra and an āyukta is mentioned in an inscription of Budhagupta as a viṣaya-pati (ibid., XV, p. 139). Naiyogika (or niyogin) may therefore be supposed to have been the ruler of some territorial division. The sañcarantakas are “ spies ” (see Manu, VII. 122) and the bhaṭa-manuṣyas are “ soldiers.”

The grant is said to have been confirmed by libation of water (udakādīm)¹ and made valid as long as the moon and stars endure (ā-candā-tārakālīka kātūnaṃ). All the eighteen kinds of parihāras were granted. The inhabitants of the viśaya, specially those of Āpiṭṭi and Cillarekakoḍumka, were ordered to observe the parihāras and to see that they were observed by others. The king says, “ Now, if anybody, knowing this, proud of being a favourite of the king, should cause or cause to be caused a smaller obstacle to the donees, him, forsooth, we shall restrain by punishment. And further I pray both the future great warriors of our Pallava race who may rule within a period exceeding one hundred thousand years, as well as kings differing from us in descent, saying unto them: ‘ To him among you blessings, who in his time makes the people act according to the rule written above. But he who acts contrary to it shall be the lowest of men loaded with the guilt of the five mortal sins.’ ”

Of the eighteen kinds of parihāras the grant specifies the following: (1) a-kūra-collaka-vinesi-khaṭṭā-vāsa, (2) a-dudha-dadhi-gaḥana, (3) a-ratṭha-samvinayika (4) a-lona-guḷa-cchobha, (5) a-kara-vetṭhi-komjala, (6) a-paramparā-balivadda-gaḥana, (7) a-taṇa-katṭha-gaḥana, and (8) a-harītaka-sāka-pupha-gaḥana. The first parihāra has already been explained in connection with the Maḍavolu grant. The next parihāra, viz., a-dudha-dadhi-gaḥana, made the village free from the obligation of supplying sweet and sour milk, and appears to fall under the category of pāna, daily payable by the villagers to the grāmika (see

Manu quoted above). A-rat̥ṭha-saṃvinayika has been explained. A-loṇa-guḷa-cchobha (a-lavaṇa-guḍa-kṣobha) has been translated by Bühler as "free from troubles about salt and sugar." That digging pits for extracting salt was a royal monopoly is known from a number of inscriptions which refer to parihāras like a-loṇa-khādaka (a-lavaṇa-khātaka), a-lavaṇa-kreṇi-khanaka (Corp. Ins. Ind., III, line 28, No. 55, and No. 56) and sa-loha-lavaṇ-ākara (Ep. Ind., IV, p. 101). The word guḍa, mentioned along with loṇa, shows that the manufacture of sugar was also a royal monopoly. The following immunity exempted the village from the obligation of supplying grass and wood (cf. indhana in the passage quoted from Manu). The last parihāra of the list seems to signify exemption from the (occasional) supply of myrobalan, vegetables and flowers. Bühler says (ibid., I, p. 8, note 28), "Milk, grass, fire-wood, vegetables and so forth had to be furnished gratis by the villagers to royal officers and their servants. The custom still prevails in many native states" (see also Manu quoted above).

The grant was executed by the king himself and the plates were prepared in the handwriting of his privy-councillor (rahasyādhikṛta) Bhaṭṭisamma who was the bhojaka (i.e., ināmdār) of Kolivāla.

The Hirahadagalli plates are held together by a ring to which an almost circular and somewhat battered seal, about an inch in diameter, is attached. The emblem on the seal is an animal facing the proper right, which, according to Bühler, may be intended for a deer or a horse.¹ Below the emblem stands the word Sivaskandavarmanah, the last three letters of which are defaced and doubtful. It is certain that the legend on the seal was written in Sanskrit like the maṅgala at the end of the inscription which reads svasti go-brāhmaṇa-lekhaka-vācaka-śrotṛbhya(h) iti. This along with the fact that the Mayidavolu and Hirahadagalli grants sometimes express compound consonants by more than one letter shows that these two grants were executed at a time when Sanskrit had already made its way in the field of South Indian epigraphy.

III. The British Museum plates appear to have been originally found at Kondakur in the Guntur district of the Madras Presidency. They were issued in the reign of sri-vijaya-Khandavamma (= Skandavarman). We have already discussed about the identification of Śivaskandavarman of the Mayidavolu and Hirahadagalli grants and Skandavarman of the British Museum grant and have shown that the identification is extremely doubtful.

The donor of the grant is Cārudevī, wife (devī) of the Pallava Yuvamahārāja Buddhavarman and mother of a prince whose name has been conjecturally read by Hultzsch as Buddhyaṅkura. The relation of Mahārāja Skandavarman and Yuvamahārāja Buddhavarman is not specified in the grant. There is no evidence that this prince, who seems to have been a provincial governor,¹ ascended the throne. Skandavarman is not known to have ruled at Kāñcī. It is possible that he was an early member of the Pallava house of the Nellore-Guntur region and was an ancestor of Skandavarman II of the Oṃgodu grant (No. 1). He may possibly be identified with king No. 29 (or No. 32 ?) of the Vayalur list (see Appendix below).

By this grant Cārudevī seems to have addressed the villagers and officials at Kaḍaka (Kaṭaka) to the effect that a certain field to be ploughed by Ātuka on the western side of the drinking well below the rāja-taḍāga, containing four nivartanas of land, had been given by her highness for the increase of her highness's life and power, to the god Nārāyaṇa of the Kuḷi-mahātaraka temple at Dālura. This Kuḷi-mahātaraka-devakula appears to signify a temple established by a Mahattara named Kuḷi. The villagers and officials were asked to exempt the field with all immunities and to cause it to be exempted. The executor of the grant was Rohanigutta (Rohinīgupta).

The most interesting feature of the grant is that though it is written in Prakrit, it contains two imprecatory verses (bahubhir=vasudhā dattā etc.) which are in Sanskrit and are so common in the Sanskrit copper-plate grants. This fact and the fact that the grant expresses compound consonants, in all cases, with more than one letter, appear to suggest that the British Museum grant is slightly later than the grants of Sivaskandavarman.

The seal of Skandavarman attached to the British Museum grant bears a standing animal which faces the proper right and looks like a deer, but must be meant for a bull, the crest of the Pallavas (cf. Bomb. Gaz., I, ii, p. 319, note 5), and, over the back of the bull, a few indistinct symbols which may be taken for the sun, a crescent, and perhaps one or more stars (Ep. Ind., VIII, p. 144).

CHENDALUR GRANT OF KUMĀRAVIṢṆU II

The Chendalur grant was issued from viṣaya-Kāñcīpura on the fifth tithi of the bright half of Kārttika in the 2nd regnal year of the Pallava king Kumāraviṣṇu II, who was the son of Mahārāja Buddhavarman, grandson of Mahārāja Kumāraviṣṇu I and great-grandson of Mahārāja Skandavarman. Kumāraviṣṇu I and his son Buddhavarman have possibly been mentioned in the Velurpalaiyam record (see above, p. 160). Like Skandavarman II (of the Uruvupalli, Omgodu No. 2, and Pikira grants), Kumāraviṣṇu I has been described as the fifth loka-pāla. In the Mahābhārata (see Hopkins, Epic Mythology, p. 149) and the Nanaghat cave inscription (Lüders, List, No. 1112) the gods Yama, Varuṇa, Kubera and Vāsava are called the four loka-pālas or guardians of the world. The description of a king as the fifth loka-pāla means to say that he was a protector of the earth-like those four gods. In classical literature (e.g., Raghu, II, 16) a king is called madhyama-loka-pāla, "protector of the middle world (i.e., the earth)." In this connection it is interesting to note the description of Samudragupta as "equal to (the gods) Dhanada (=Kubera), Varuṇa, Indra (=Vāsava who is however different from Indra in the Nanaghat record) and Antaka(=Yama); see Corp. Ins. Ind., III, pp. 14n., 250.¹

Like many other Pallava rulers, Kumāraviṣṇu II calls himself kaliyuga-doṣ-āvasanna-dharm-oddharṇa-nitya-sanna-ddha. This epithet is also used by Viṣṇugopavarman and Simhavarman, and Nandivarman of the Udayendiram grant. The Pallava kings thus appear to have boasted of being called "Defender of Faith;" and the epithet possibly refers to the fact that they were determined to purify their

Brahmanical faith which was influenced by heretical doctrines like Buddhism at the time of the later Sātavāhanas and the Ikṣvākus. Kumāraviṣṇu II has some epithets in common with Viṣṇugopavarman of the Uruvupalli grant. Like Viṣṇugopa and his son Siṃhavarman, he is called bhagavat-pād-ānudhyāta and parama-bhāgavata, and like the records of those two princes the Chendalur grant begins with the adoration jītaṃ bhagavatā. He was evidently a Vaiṣṇava in faith.

The record is an order to the villagers of Cendalūra in the Karmākarāṣṭra and to all the naiyogikas and vallabhas employed there. Chendalur, the find-spot of the inscription, is a place in the Ongole taluka of the Nellore district. Hultzsch has corrected Karmākarāṣṭra as Karmarāṣṭra known from several inscriptions. The form Karmmākarāṣṭra seems to be the same as Kamakaraṣṭha mentioned in a Nagarjunikonda inscription.

The word naiyogika is derived from niyoga and is evidently the same as niyogin which appears to mean "governor of a district" (cf. niyogī karmasaciva āyukto vyāpṛtaś = ca saḥ, Hemacandra). Vallabha means either the king's favourites or keepers of the royal cattle.

It is said that there were eight hundred paṭṭikās (pieces) of khās land (rāja-vastu bhuvā sthitam) in the village of Cendalūra, and that by this grant the king offered 432 paṭṭikās out of that land as a Brahmadeya (brahmadeya-maryādayā) to a Brāhmaṇa named Bhavaskandatrāta¹ who belonged to the Kauṇḍinya gotra and the Chāndogya sūtra. The lands given did not include what was previously granted for the enjoyment of gods (devabhoga-hala-varjīṃ). The grant was executed with a hope for the increase of the king's longevity, strength, victory and wealth, in accordance with the hala-nyāya (laws regarding the halas, like devahala, bhikṣuhala, etc.) and was made immune with all the parihāras.

The villagers and officers were ordered to observe the immunities and to see that others observed them. People who would violate this order have been threatened with physical punishment. The charter ends with the mangala : go-brāhmaṇa (sic) nandatu, svasty = astu prajābhyah, which reminds us of a similar māṅgala at the end of the Hira-hadagalli grant of Sivaskandavarman.

The word paṭṭikā ordinarily means "a piece of cloth;" on analogy, it seems to mean "a piece of land." We do not know whether paṭṭikā here signifies a particular land-measure like the nivartana. The land is said to have been situated in the Kavacakāra-bhoga of the Karmmākarāṣṭra. Bhoga is evidently the same as bhukti of North Indian inscriptions. It signifies a territorial unit like "district." Cf. Pallava-bhoga (Kāñcī?) mentioned in the Mahāvamsa (Ind. Cult., I, p. 111).

UDAYENDIRAM GRANT (No. 1) OF NANDIVARMAN

The Udayendiram grant was issued from Kāñcīpura on the fifth tithi of the bright half of Vaisākha possibly in the first year of the Pallava king Nandivarman, son of Skandavarman II, grandson of Simhavarman and great-grandson of Skandavarman I. Like the issuers of other early Pallava charters, Nandivarman is called kaliyuga-doṣ-āvasannadharma-oddha-ṛaṇa-nitya-sannaddha. His epithets bhagavat-pād-ānudhyāta and parama-bhāgavata together with the fact that his grant begins with the adoration jitaṃ bhagavatā, show that he was a Vaiṣṇava like Viṣṇugopa, Simhavarman and Kumāraaviṣṇu II.

Udayendiram, the find-spot of Nandivarman's grant, is a place in the North Arcot district. The grant is full of textual mistakes; the characters moreover do not belong to the early Pallava period. According to Kielhorn (Ep. Ind., III, p. 143), the grant is to be palæographically assigned to about A.D. 680; according to Fleet however it was fabricated about 935 A.D. (Bomb. Gaz., I, ii, p. 321 n.) But the facts that the four kings mentioned in it are given exactly in the same order in the Vayalur record and that the style and phraseology of the grant are very similar to those of the early Pallava records, seem to prove that the grant was copied, though by an incompetent scribe, from an early genuine record.

By this grant, the Pallava king Nandivarman offered four pieces of āraṇya land at Kāñcīvāyil-grāma in Adeyāra-rāṣṭra, according to pūrva-bhoga-maryādā, to a Brāhmaṇa named Kuḷacarman (=Kulaśarman) who was an inhabitant of Kāñcivāyil and belonged to the Kauśika gotra, Pravacana sūtra and Taittirīya carana. The lands were granted in accordance with Brahmadeya-maryādā, with all the immunities but with the exception of devabhoga-hala, for the increase of the king's longevity, strength, victory and wealth. It is said that the four pieces of forest-land in Kāñcivāyil-grāma are to be made immune with all the parihāras and that anyone who would violate the order should be physically punished.

The seal of Nandivarman attached to the Udayendiram grant is circular. It contains in bas-relief the figure of a standing bull facing the proper left. There is a much worn and illegible inscription at the margin (loc. cit.).

OMGODU GRANT (No. 1) OF SKANDAVARMAN II

In the Omgodu grant (No. 1) of Skandavarman II, the reigning king's great-grandfather, Kumāraviṣṇu, has been called aśvamedha-yājī, i.e., performer of the Horse-sacrifice. He was therefore a great king who was possibly a successor of Vīrakoṭṭavarman of the Darsi plate.

Kumāraviṣṇu was succeeded by his son Skandavarman I who is mentioned in the Omgodu (No. 1) and Uruvupalli grants. He is said to have been a parama-brahmaṇya; but his most significant epithet seems to be sva-vīry-ādhigata-rājya, which means to say that he obtained the kingdom by his own valour. His father was a powerful king who performed the great aśvamedha sacrifice. The significance of this epithet, as I have already pointed out, may be that after the death of Kumāraviṣṇu, Skandavarman I quarrelled with his brother who was probably Kumāraviṣṇu's successor at Kāñcī, and carved out a separate principality in the northern part of the Pallava kingdom. Kumāraviṣṇu's successor at Kāñcī was possibly Buddhavarman mentioned in the Chendalur grant. We cannot however be definite as regards this suggestion, as the identification of this Kumāraviṣṇu with Kumāraviṣṇu I of the Chendalur grant is very doubtful.

The son and successor of Skandavarman I was Vīravarman who has been called "the sole hero in the world" in all the inscriptions. He was possibly a warrior of considerable importance. According to Krishnasastri (Ep. Ind., XV, p. 249), this Vīravarman is to be identified with Vīrakoṭṭavarman of the Darsi plate, Darsi, identified by some scholars with Daśanapura, is a place in the Podili division of the Nellore district. Only the first plate of the Darsi grant has been discovered; it was edited by Hultzsch in Ep. Ind., I, p. 357. The grant was issued from the adhiṣṭhāna of the victorious Daśanapura by a Pallava king whose name and genealogy cannot be known until the missing plates of the grant are found. Only the name of Vīrakoṭṭavarman, the great-grandfather of the issuer, is known. The Sanskrit form of the word is Vīrakūrca which is found in the Vayalur and Velurpalaiyam records. The use of this Prakritised name appears to show that the grant was issued at a time when Prakrit was still lingering in the field of South Indian epigraphy. The identification of this king with Vīravarman however seems to me doubtful, since these two distinct forms (viz., Vīrakūrca and Vīravarman) are found as names of different kings in the Vayalur list of early Pallava kings. Vīrakoṭṭa of the Darsi plate may be the same as (the second) Vīrakūrca of the Vayalur-list.

Vīravarman was succeeded by his son who is called śrī-vijaya-Skandavarman in his own Omgodu grant (No. 1), but simply Skandavarman in the inscriptions of his descendants. He has some epithets in common with Kumāraśiṣṇu I of the Chendalur grant and also with Skandavarman II of the Udayendiram grant. Like Kumāraśiṣṇu I of the Chendalur grant he is described as the fifth loka-pāla. Though he is not called parama-bhāgavata, his epithet bhagavad-bhakti-sadbhāva-sambhāvita-sarva-kalyāṇa in the grants of his grandson shows that he was a Vaiṣṇava.

The Omgodu grant (No. 1) was issued from the victorious city of Tambrāpa in the 33rd regnal year of Skandavarman II, on the thirteenth tithi of the third Hemanta-pakṣa. This form of dating resembles that used in the early Prakrit grants and is remarkably different from the form of dating used in the Sanskrit grants of the Pallavas. It therefore shows that Skandavarman II ruled not long after the kings of the Prakrit charters. We have already shown that some parts of the Mayidavolu, Hirahadagalli and British Museum grants are written in Sanskrit and that the issuers of those grants could not have ruled long before the kings who issued the Sanskrit grants. We have also suggested that the Sanskrit grants showing considerable Prakrit influence may roughly be placed in the period between the middle of the fourth and the beginning of the fifth century A.D.¹

By this grant the king made a Brahmadeya of the village of Oṃgoḍu in the Karmarāṣṭra, and offered the same with the exception of the devabhoga-hala, in a form of sāttvika-dāna, to a dvi-veda and ṣaḍaṅga-pārāga Brāhmaṇa named Golaśarman of the Kāśyapa gotra. The Karmarāṣṭra in which Oṃgoḍu was situated has been taken to be the same as Kamma-nāḍu of later Telugu inscriptions and has been identified with the northern part of Nellore and southern part of Guntur. According to Krishnasastri (Ep. Ind., XV, p. 254), Oṃgoḍu may be the same as modern Ongole, the head quarters of the Ongole taluka of the Guntur district. Of the boundaries of Oṃgoḍu given in the Oṃgodu grant (No. 2) of Simhavarman, Koḍikim may be identical with modern Koniki near Ongole and Penukaparṇu may be the same as Pinukkiparṇu mentioned as the family name of certain Brāhmaṇas who were recipients of a village called Taṇḍantotṭam near Kumbakonam (S. Ind. Ins., II, pp. 519, 532).

The seal of Skandavarman II attached to the Omgodu grant (No. 1) is almost circular. It is totally worn away, and has no trace of any symbols, "though it may be presumed to have had on it originally the recumbent bull, as in the case of other Pallava grants" (Ep. Ind., XV, p. 249).

CROWN-PRINCE VIṢṆUGOPA AND DHARMAMAHARAJA SIMHAVARMAN

Viṣṇugopa or Viṣṇugopavarman, son of Skandavarman II, did not ascend the throne. His Uruvupalli grant was issued in the 11th year of the reign of Mahārāja Simhavarman. As we have already seen, Fleet thought that this Simhavarman was an elder brother of the Yuvamahārāja (or Yuvarāja) Viṣṇugopavarman. Hultzsch, however, suggests that he is no other than Viṣṇugopa's son who issued the Oṃgodu (No. 2), Pīkira and Mangalur grants. According to the latter view therefore the Pallava throne passed from Skandavarman II directly to his grandson Simhavarman.

In the Uruvupalli grant Viṣṇugopavarman calls himself prajā-saṃrañjana-paripālan-odyoga-satata-satra-vrata-dīkṣita and rājārṣi-guṇa-sarva-sandoha-vijigīṣu, which he could not have said if he was not a ruler of subjects. As a crown-prince he was possibly in charge of a district of the Pallava kingdom. The district of which he was the governor probably had its head quarters at Palakkada from where the Uruvupalli grant was issued. As we have already noted, both Viṣṇugopa and his son Simhavarman are called parama-bhāgavata in the inscriptions, all of which begins with the adoration : jītaṃ bhagavatā. They were evidently Vaiṣṇava. In this connection, the name Viṣṇugopa and the dedication of 200 nivartanas of land (595 acres according to Kauṭilya, but 148·6 acres according to his commentator ; see below) to the god Viṣṇuhāra may also be noted.

In all the inscriptions of Viṣṇugopa and Simhavarman, the Pallavas have been credited with the performance of many aśvamedhas or many kratus and this evidently refers to the aśvamedha performed by their ancestor Kumāraviṣṇu. So far we know only of two Pallava kings who performed the Horse-sacrifice. The first of them is Śivaskandavarman of the Mayidavolu and Hirahadagalli grants, and the second is Kumāraviṣṇu, grandfather of Skandavarman II who issued the Omgodu grant (No. 1). The former is also credited with the performance of the Agniṣṭoma and Vājapeya sacrifices.

In the Omgodu grant (No. 2) of Simhavarman, the Pallavas have been referred to as vallabha which is evidently the same as śrī-vallabha of the Māngalur grant. It is interesting to note that titles like śrī-vallabha, prthvī-vallabha, etc., were adopted by the Calukya kings of Bādāmi.¹ We do not know whether the Calukyas appropriated the title of the Pallavas. It is however certain that the Rāṣṭrakūṭa kings who succeeded the Calukyas in the sovereignty of the Deccan appropriated these titles and were therefore known as vallabha-rāja. Arabic travelers of the 9th and 10th centuries mention a powerful dynasty of the Balharās who ruled at Mānkīr. According to R. G. Bhandarkar (Bomb. Gaz., I, ii, p. 209), Balharā is an Arabic corruption of Vallabharāja and the Balharās of Mānkīr are no other than the Rāṣtrakūṭas of Mānyakheṭa.¹

I. The Uruvupalli grant of Viṣṇugopavarman was issued from the glorious and victorious sthāna of Palakkada. By this grant, the Dharma-yuyamahārāja Viṣṇugopavarman, who belonged to the Bhāradvāja gotra and the Pallava family, issued an information about his donation to the villagers of Uruvupalli (situated in Muṇḍarāṣṭra) and an order to all the āyuktakas and naiyyokas, and the rāja-vallabhas and sañcarantakas, who had to make the following gift of the crown-prince immune with all the parihāras. The grant was in the form of 200 nivartanas of lands which were made a devabhoga to be enjoyed by the god Viṣṇuhāra whose temple called Viṣṇuhāra-devakula was built by the senāpati Viṣṇuvarman at a place called Kaṇḍukūra (or Keṇḍukūra). The object of the grant was the increase of longevity and strength of the donor. It is warned that any one who would transgress the order would be liable to physical punishment. The plates are said to have been given in the 11th year of Siṃhavarma-mahārāja, on the tenth day of the dark half of Pauṣa.

Āyuktaka which, as we have already seen, is synonymous with nīyogin, karma-saciva and vyāpṛta, seems to mean "governor of a district." The passage asmīn viṣaye sarv-āyuktakāḥ possibly shows that there were several āyuktakas employed in a single viṣaya. The word naiyyoka is evidently the same as naiyogika of the Chendalur grant which is derived from nīyoga (office, employment) and seems to mean "governor." The word rāja-vallabha may signify favourites or subordinates of the Pallava king. It may also possibly refer to keepers of the royal horses or cows.¹ Sañcarantaka has already been explained. It is the same as sañcāra of Kauṭilya's Arthaśāstra. For the appointment of spies in the king's own state to report to him about the conduct of his officials and subjects, see Manusamhitā, VII, 122.

The word devabhoga has been shown to be the same as devatrā, devasāt, devadeya and devadāya, and signifies "religious donation to a god." In numerous South Indian grants reference is made to the fact that the land is granted with the exception of lands previously given away as devabhogahala. The word devahala has been used in the same sense in the Peddaveḡi grant of Nandivarman II Śālanakāyana (above, pp. 94-95).

The village of Uruvupalli in the Muṇḍarāṣṭra has not yet been satisfactorily identified. The boundary of the field granted is however clearly stated in the charter. The southern and eastern sides of the field were bounded by the river Suprayoga (or Suprayogā). At the northern extremity was a large tamarind tree in the hills; and the western side was bounded by the villages of Koṇḍamuruvudu, Keṇḍukūra and Kararupūra.

According to Fleet (Ind. Ant., V, p. 5), "The seal connecting the plates bears the representation of what seems to be a dog, but in native opinion a lion." The figure is possibly that of a bull.

II. The Omgodu grant (No. 2) was issued from an unnamed skandhāvāra on the fifth tithi of the bright half of Vaiśākha in the fourth regnal year of Siṃhavarman, son of Viṣṇugopa. By this record, the king granted the village of Omgodu (previously granted by his grandfather to a Brāhmaṇa named Golaśarman of the Kāśyapa gotra) to a Brāhmaṇa named Devaśarman who was an inhabitant of Koṇḍura and belonged to the Kāśyapa gotra. Devaśarman was possibly a relative and heir of Golaśarman. The village of Koṇḍura seems to be the same as the native village of Śivaśarman, recipient of the Polamuru grant of Viṣṇukunḍin Mādhavavarman I, and of Casamiśarman, recipient of the Narasaraopet grant of Pallava Viṣṇugopavarman II. The identification of Oṃgoḍu in Karmarāṣṭra has already been discussed.

The grant is here referred to as pūrva-bhoga-vivarjita, which seems to be the same as devabhoga-hala-varja of other grants. It was endowed with all the parihāras, and is said to have been copied from the oral order of the Bhaṭṭāraka, i.e., the king himself. According to Krishnasastri (Ep. Ind., XV, p. 252), the characters of this grant are of a later period than that used in Simhavarman's other grants. He is therefore inclined to think that the grant was copied from an original record about the beginning of the 7th century A.D.

In line 22 of the grant, reference is made to an eclipse¹ being the occasion of the grant. It is however contradicted by the details of the date, viz., 5th lunar day of the bright half of Vaiśākha (ll. 31-32). Krishnasastri however tried to reconcile the two particulars by supposing "that the grant which was actually made on the new moon day of Chaitra, a possible day for the nearest solar eclipse, was engraved on the copper-plates five days after, i.e., on the 5th day of the bright half of Vaiśākha" (ibid., p. 253).²

saṃkrānty-ādiṣu kāleṣu dattaṃ bhavati c=ākṣayam.*

² According to Fleet (J.R.A.S., 1915, p. 473), Simhavarman, son of Viṣṇugopa, is to be identified with the king of the same name who is known from the Lokavibhāga

III. The Pīkira grant of Siṃhavarman was issued from the glorious and victorious camp at the king's residence at Menmātura in his 5th regnal year on the third tithi of the bright half of Aśvayuja with a hope for the increase of his longevity, strength and victory. The copper-plates were discovered at Nelalur in the Ongole taluka of the Guntur district.

By this record, the villagers of Pīkira in Munḍa-rāṣṭra, as well as the adhyakṣas, vallavas and śāsana-saṅcārins, stationed in the rāṣṭra, were informed of the king's gift of the above village, endowed with all the immunities (but with the exception of lands previously granted for the enjoyment of gods) to a Taittiriya Brāhmaṇa named Vīlāsaśarman who belonged to the Kāśyapa gotra. The king says here that, as the village of Pīkira has been made a Brahmadeya, it should be made immune with all parihāras by the king's officials who would also see that they be observed by others. Any one transgressing this order is warned to be liable to physical punishment. The word adhyakṣa means a "superintendent" or a "ruler" (Apte, Sanskrit-English Dictionary, s.v. ; Gītā, IX, 10 ; Kumārasambhava, VI, 17).¹ Vallava means gopa according to Amara ; other Pallava inscriptions (e.g., the Chendalur and Mangalur grants) have vallabha, which means ghoṭaka-rakṣaka according to Jaṭādhara (see Śabdakalpadruma, s.v. pālaka). According to Amara however vallabha means adhyakṣa which has been explained by a commentator as gav-ādhyakṣa (ibid, s.v.). Vallabha is generally taken to signify favourites of the king. Śāsana-saṅcārīn may be the same as Śāsana-hara, i.e., messenger ; it may also be identical with Saṅcarantaka of other inscriptions.

to have ascended the throne in A D. 436-37 In A D (436-37 + 3 =) 439-40 however there was no solar eclipse on the newmoon day of Caitra

The seal of Simhavarman attached to the Pikira grant is very much worn, but bears in relief, on a counter-sunk surface, an animal (bull?) with mouth open and face to the proper left. It is represented as seated on a horizontal line that is in relief. It closely resembles the animal represented on the seal attached to the Uruvupalli grant. The tail and fore-legs of the animal are not seen (Ep. Ind., VIII, p. 160).

IV. The Mangalur grant was issued from Daśanapura (identified with Darsi in the Nellore district), on the fifth tithi of the bright half of Caitra in the 8th year of Simhavarman's reign with the hope of increasing his longevity, strength and victory.

By this record, the king granted the village of Maṅgaḍūr or Maṅgaḷūr in Veṅgorāṣṭra as a Brahmadeya to the following Brāhmanas :—(1) Āpastambīya Rudraśarman of the Ātreya gotra, (2) Āpastambīya Tūrkaśarman of the Vātsyāyana gotra, (3) Āpastambīya Dāmaśarman of the Kauśika gotra, (4) Āpastambīya Yajñaśarman of the Bhāradvāja gotra, (5) Āpastambīya Bhavakoṭigupta¹ of the Parāśara gotra, and (6) Vājasaneyi Bhartṛśarman, (7) Audamedha, (8) Chandoga, (9) Śivadatta, and (10) Hairaṇyakeśa Śaṣṭhikumāra of the Gautama gotra.

The villagers of Maṅgaḍūr as well as the adhyakṣas, vallabhas and Śāsana-saṅcārins were informed of the donation which was endowed with all the immunities, but was with the exception of the devabhoga-hala. The villagers and officials were ordered to observe the immunities themselves and to see also that others observed them. Transgressors of the order were liable to physical punishment.

in the possession of the Śālaṅkāyanas as early as the time of Ptolemy (140 A.D.) ; but they became independent only after the downfall of the Sātavāhanas. At the time of Siṃhavarman, the southern fringe of the district may have been occupied by the Pallavas. It is however possible that the name Veṅgī extended over some parts of the country to the south of the Krishna at the time of the Śālaṅkāyanas.¹ Maṅgaḍūr was possibly situated in the southern fringe of the ancient kingdom of the Śālaṅkāyanas.

PART II
WESTERN DISTRICTS

CHAPTER I

EARLY HISTORY OF THE KUNTALA REGION

The Kuntala country seems to have comprised the southernmost districts of the Bombay Presidency and the northern part of Mysore.¹ In a wider sense Kuntala possibly signified the whole of the Kanarese speaking area of Bombay, Madras and Mysore with the exception perhaps of the coast region. The position of the country is indicated by the fact that it was washed by the river Kṛṣṇavarṇā (Ind. Ant., 1879, p. 18) and included Kurgod in the Bellary district (Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 265), Gaṅgavāḍi in south Mysore (Ep. Carn., IV, Hunsur 137), Nargund in the Dharwar district (Ind. Ant., 1883, p. 47), Taragal in the Kothapur state (ibid., p. 98), Terdal in the Sangli state in South Bombay (ibid., 1883, p. 14) and Kuntalanagara (Nubattur in the north-west of Mysore).² From about the middle of the fourth century up to about the middle of the seventh, when the country was finally made a province of the Calukya empire, Kuntala or Karṇāṭa³ is known to have been ruled by princes who belonged to the Kadamba family.

² I am indebted for some references to Prof. Raychaudhuri. See Bomb. Gaz., I, ii, p. 558.

³ Kuntala and Karṇāṭa are used as synonymous in the Vikramāṅkadevacarita by Bilhana. Vikramāditya VI has been called both kuntal-endu (or kuntal-endra) and karṇāṭ-endu (IX, 41-42). Vaijayantī, identified with Banavāsī, has been described as a ṭīlaka (that is to say, the capital) of the Karṇāṭa country in the Birur grant of Viṣṇuvar-

Some inscriptions of the Nagarakhandā Kadambas (J. B. B. R. A. S., IX, pp. 245, 285; Ep. Carn., VII, Sk. 225, etc.) say that the Kadamba family originated from the Nandas who ruled over Kuntala and the adjoining districts of the Deccan.¹ But these inscriptions belong to the eleventh and twelfth centuries, and very little importance can be put to the traditions recorded in them. It is however not quite impossible that the mighty Nandas held sway over considerable portions of the Deccan. Reference to the wealth of the Nandas in a Tamil poem (Aiyangar, Beg. S. Ind. Hist., p. 89) and the existence of a city called Nander or Nau-Nand-Dehra on the Godavari (Raychaudhuri, Pol. Hist. Anc. Ind., 2nd ed., p. 142) may be supposed to support the above conjecture.

In the Sravana-Belgola inscriptions (Ep. Carn., VIII, Sb. 1, 17, 54, 40, 108; III, Sr. 147, 148, etc.), there is a story of the migration of Chandragupta Maurya in Mysore in company of the Jain teacher Bhadrabāhu. An inscription in the Sorab taluka (ibid., VIII, Sb. 263) says that Nāgara-man (Ep. Carn., VI, p. 91). Karṇāṭa therefore signified the same territory as Kuntala or the country of which Kuntala formed a part. In the traditional lists however they are sometimes separately mentioned. Karṇāṭa has been taken to have been derived from a Dravidian original like kar-nāḍu = kan-nāḍu (black country) or kara-nāḍu (great country; cf. Mahā-rāṣṭra). Kuntala seems also to have been Sanskritised from an original like Karṇāṭa. The separate mention of Kuntala, Karṇāṭa, Banavāsī, Māhiṣaka (cf. Māhiṣa-viṣaya in a Kadamba grant), etc., in some of the traditional lists may possibly refer to the fact that these names originally signified separate geographical units abutting on one another. Sometimes however one of them may have formed the part of another, cf. the case of Tāmralipti which is mentioned in literature as an independent state, as a part of Sumba and also as a part of Vaṅga; also the case of Taxila (Raychaudhuri, Indian Antiquities, p. 186 f). With the rise of Kanarese powers like the Calukyas and the Rāṣṭrakūṭas, the name Karṇāṭa (sometimes also the name Kuntala) extended over a large part of western and southern Deccan. In the Kaliṅgattu-parāṇi, the Calukyas have been described as Kuntalar, "lords of Kuntala" (see Tamil Lexicon, Mad. Univ., s.v.). An inscription of Harhara II, dated in Saka 1307 (S. Ind. Ins., I, p. 158, verses 25-26) says that Vijaynagar (modern Hampi) belonged to the Kuntala viṣaya of the Karṇāṭa country.

khaṇḍa "was protected by the wise Candragupta, an abode of the usages of eminent Kṣatriyas." This record however belongs to the fourteenth century, and none attaches much importance to it. But these traditions, taken together with references to the Vamba-Mōriyar (Maurya upstarts) advancing as far south as the Podiyil Hill in the Tinnevely district, may possibly be taken to suggest that the Maurya successors of the Nandas were master of considerable portions of Lower Deccan and the Far South. The above traditions are in a way confirmed by the discovery of the inscriptions of Aśoka at Siddāpur, Jatinga-Rameswar and Brahmagiri in the Chitaldrug district of Mysore. This goes to show that at least the greater part of the Kuntala country was within the dominions of the Mauryas at the time of Aśoka. According to a tradition recorded in the Mahāvamsa (XII, 41) and the Dīpavamsa (VIII, 10), the Buddhist teacher Rakkhita was deputed to Banavāsī (the capital of Kuntala or the district round the city) in the third century B. C. shortly after the Great Council held at Pāṭaliputra in the eighteenth year of Aśoka. Some scholars think that Kongkin-na-pu-lo visited by the Chinese pilgrim Yuan Chwang is to be identified with the capital of the Kuntala country. If this identification is to be accepted, we have possibly another tradition regarding the Maurya occupation of Kuntala. Yuan Chwang says that there was to the south-west of the city a stūpa, said to have been built by Aśoka on the spot where Śrutaviṃśatikotī made miraculous exhibitions and had many converts (Watters, On Yuan Chwang's Travels, II, pp. 237-38; Beal, Bud. Rec. W. World, II, pp. 253-55).¹

We know very little of the Kuntala country for a long time after Aśoka. The Sātavāhana king Gautamīpura Sāta-karṇi, who ruled about the first quarter of the second century and claimed a sort of suzerainty over the whole of Dakṣiṇāpatha, possibly had some connections with Vaijayantī (Banavāsī),¹ the capital of ancient Kuntala or Karṇāṭa. The claim of Gautamīputra's lordship over the Malaya mountain (the southern part of the Western Ghats) may be a vague one; but the Nasik inscription (Ep. Ind., VIII, p. 71) of his eighteenth regnal year records an order of the Śātavāhana king when he was in "the camp of victory of the army at (or, of) Vaijayantī." This record was issued through the amātya Śivagupta who was, according to Rapson (Catalogue, p. lviii), apparently Gautamīputra's minister at Banavāsī. Rapson further identifies this Śivagupta with Śivaskandagupta mentioned in a Karle inscription of the same Śātavāhana king (loc. cit.; Ep. Ind., VII, p. 64). There is as yet no further proof to make us definite as regards the occupation of Kuntala by the main line of the Śātavāhanas.

According to the Purāṇas, the Andhra (i.e., Śātavāhana) dynasty had five different branches (cf. andhrāṇām samsthītāḥ pañca teṣāṃ vaṁśāḥ samāḥ punaḥ; Vāyu, 99, 358). Indeed one branch of the Śātavāhanas, generally called the Cuṭu-Śātakarṇi family, is known from inscriptions, coins and literary references to have ruled at Vaijayantī (Banavāsī) in the Kuntala country before the Kadambas.

The Matsya list of the Andhra (=Śātavāhana) kings gives the name of Kuntala-Śātakarṇi. A commentator of Vātsyāyana's Kāmasūtra clearly explains the term kuntala in the name Kuntala-Śātakarṇi-Śātavāhana as kūntala-viṣaye jālatvāt tat-samākhyāḥ. A Sātavāhana king of Kuntala is mentioned in the Kāvya-mīmāṃsā as having ordered the exclusive use of Prakrit in his harem. Prof. Raychaudhuri (op. cit., p. 260) is inclined to identify this king with the celebrated Hāla, sometimes credited with the authorship of the Gāthāsaptasatī. According to this scholar, the Matsya-Purāṇa which gives thirty names in the list of the Andhra or Sātavāhana kings mentions not only the kings of the main line, but includes also the kings of the branch that ruled in Kuntala.

Inscriptions discovered in the western and south-western districts of the Sātavāhana empire, that is to say, in Aparānta (cf. Kanheri, Arch. Surv. W. Ind., V, p. 86) and in Kuntala (cf. Banavāsī; Ind. Ant., 1885, p. 331) including the north of Mysore (cf. Malavalli, Shimoga district, Ep. Carn., VII, p. 251) testify to the existence of a line of the Sātavāhanas called the Cuṭukula which was in possession of South-Western Deccan before the conquest of Banavāsī by the Kadambas. The relation of the Cuṭu-Śātakarṇis with the Śātakarṇis of the main line is quite uncertain. But Rapson thinks that, as the Cuṭus were intimately connected with the Mahārāṭhis and Mahābhōjas, it is probable that the branch of Kuntala was originally subordinate to the main line of the Sātavāhanas and that it shook off the yoke when the power of the imperial line began to decline after the death of Yajña Śātakarṇi (op. cit., pp. xxi-ii, xlii).

A doubtful passage of the Devagiri grant (Ind. Ant., VII, p. 35), which seems to imply a connection of the Kadambas with the Nāgas possibly suggests that the Kuntala country was originally ruled by the Nāgas. These Nāgas however may be identical with the Cuṭu-Śātakarṇis who according to many scholars belonged to the Nāga dynasty. That the Cuṭu family had Nāga connections is clear from the Kanheri inscription which mentions Nāgamūlanikā mother of Skandanāga Śātaka and daughter of Viṣṇukaḍa Cuṭu-kulānanda Śātakarṇi (Rapson, op. cit., p. liii).

The following records of the Cuṭu-Śātakarṇis are said to have so far been discovered :—

I. Kanheri inscription of Hāritīputra Viṣṇukaḍa Cuṭu-kulānanda Śātakarṇi (Rapson, loc. cit.). As the name of the king could not be read, this record was formerly attributed to the reign of Vāsiṣṭhīputra Pulumāvi. The donor mentioned in this inscription is Nāgamūlanikā who was the wife of a Mahārathi, the daughter of a Mahābhōjī and of the great king, and the mother of Skandanāga-Śātaka. Rapson has no doubt that she is to be identified with the donor of the Banavasi inscription in which she is said to have been the daughter of king Hāritīputra Viṣṇukaḍa Cuṭu-kulānanda Śātakarṇi whose name must have originally stood also in the Kanheri inscription.

II. Banavasi inscription of the twelfth year of Hāritīputra Viṣṇukaḍa Cuṭu-kulānanda Śātakarṇi (Rapson, op. cit., pp. liii-iv). According to Bühler's interpretation of the record (Ind. Ant., XIV, p. 334) the king had a daughter named Śivaskandanāgaśrī who made the grant of a nāga,¹ a tank and a vihāra (monastery) on the first lunar day of the seventh fortnight of Hemanta. With respect to these gifts amaco (amātya, i.e., minister) Khada Sāti (Skanda Sāti) was the Superintendent of work (kamamtika). The Nāga was made by Naṭaka (Nartaka), the pupil of ācārya Idamoraka (Indramayūra) of Saṃjayantī. According to the Mahā-bhārata (II, 31, 70) Saṃjayantī was situated near Karabhāṭa which may be the same as modern Karhād. Saṃjayantī may possibly be identified with Vaijayanṭī or Banavāsī which was also called Jayantī. The Mahābhārata mentions the city of Samjayantī in connection with Sahadeva's digvijaya in the south, along with the Pāṇḍyas, Keralas and Drāviḍas.

Rapson, on the other hand, thinks that the proper name of the donor is not mentioned in the inscription, but she is said to have been the daughter of the great king and to have been associated in the donation with Prince Śivaskandanāgaśrī. He further suggests that the donor is styled Mahābhojī or, it is possible, that the passage mahābhuvya mahārāja-bālikāya may be taken to mean "of the daughter of the Mahābhojī and of the great king." If the latter interpretation be accepted, the epithets—except mahārathinī—would be the same as in the Kanheri inscription. Rapson has little doubt that the prince Śivaskandanāgaśrī of this inscription is identical with Skandanāga-Śātaka of the other inscription. Thus, according to him the donors mentioned in the Kanheri and Banavasi inscriptions must be one and the same person, viz., the daughter of king Viṣṇukaḍa Cuṭu-kulānanda Śātakarṇi. He further identifies this Śivaskandanāgaśrī = Skandanāga-Śātaka with king Śivaskandavarman mentioned in the Malavalli record (Ep. Carn., VII, p. 252) of an early unknown Kadamba king, and says that the prince subsequently came to the throne of Vaijayanṭī as the heir of his maternal grandfather and was possibly the last reigning member of the Cuṭu dynasty. The identification of the slightly similar names, viz., Śivaskandanāgaśrī, Skandanāga-Śātaka and Śivaskandavarman, however, cannot be accepted as certain.

III. The Malavalli inscription of the first regnal year of Mānavya-sagotra Hāritīputra Viṣṇukaḍa Cuṭukulānanda Śātakarṇi (Ep. Carn., VII, p. 251). The inscription records the grant of a village. The king is here called rājā of the city of Vaijayanṭī. The inscription is followed on the same pillar by an early Kadamba record which mentions Mānavya-sagotra Hārītīputra Vaijayantī-pati Sivaskandavarman as a previous ruler of the locality. If judged by the standard of palaeography, the second record, according to Bühler (Ind. Ant., XXV, p. 28), cannot be much later than the first. In this connection, it is also noticed that the famous Talgunda inscription of the Kadamba king Śāntivarman refers to Sātakarni (very probably a king of the Cuṭu family) and other kings having worshipped in a Siva temple at Sthānakundūra (Talgunda). It has therefore been suggested that the Kuntala country passed into the possession of the Kadambas directly from the hands of the Cuṭu Sātakarni (Ripson, op. cit., p. lv), and the following genealogy of the Cuṭu dynasty has been drawn from the above records: —

(1) Vaijayantīpura-rāja Mānavya-sagotra Hārītīputra Cuṭukulānanda Sātakarni (Kanheri, Banavasi and Malavalli records) + Mahābhojī

Mahārathi + Nāgamulanikā.

(2) Vaijayantī-pati Mānavya-sagotra Hārītīputra Sivaskandavarman (Malavalli record).

We have already said that the identification Sivaskandanāgaśrī = Skandanāga-Sātaka = Sivaskandavarman is not quite happy. It has moreover been pointed out (see above, p. 168, note 2) that, on linguistic consideration, the Malavalli record of year 1 appears to be later than the Banavasi record of year 12. The language of the Banavasi inscription resembles that of the records of the Sātavāhanas and Ikṣvākus; the language of the Malavalli inscription is, on the other hand, very similar to that of the grants of Pallava Śivaskandavarman. I therefore think that the Banavasi and Malavalli records belong to two different Viṣṇukaḍa Cuṭukulānanda Śātakarṇis. This suggestion is also supported by the palaeographical standard of the Banavasi inscription. According to Bühler (Ind. Ant., XIV, p. 331 ff.), the record is to be placed about the end of the first or the beginning of the second century.

From the fact that, according to the evidence of the Talgunda record, Mayūraśarman, the first king of the Kadamba family, received the paṭṭabandha-sampūjā along with the country from the Prehāra (river?) up to the western (Arabian) sea from the Pallava kings of Kāñcī, it appears that for a time the Kuntala country passed into the possession of the Pallavas. This may have taken place about the time of the great Śivaskandavarman and his father whose direct rule is known to have extended as far as the Andhrāpatha (i.e., the Andhra country with its capital at Dhamṇakaḍa=Dhānyakataka) in the north and the Sātāhanirattṭha (i.e., the Bellary district) in the north-west. We have also shown (see above, pp. 168, 184) that a comparison of the language of the Malavalli record with that of the Mayidavolu and Hirahadagalli grants would place the rule of Mayūraśarman, the progenitor of the Kadambas, not long after the accession of Śivaskandavarman about the beginning of the fourth century. Since the language of the Malavalli record of Viṣṇukaḍa Cuṭukulānanda Śātakarṇi who, as we have suggested, appears to have been different from the earlier Viṣṇukaḍa Cuṭukulānanda Śātakarṇi of the Banavasi inscription, closely resembles the language of the Chandravalli record of Mayūraśarman and the Malavalli grant which seems to belong either to the same king or to his immediate successor, and does not appear to be earlier than the grants of Śivaskandavarman, I think it not impossible that the later members of the Cuṭu dynasty of Kuntala acknowledged the suzerainty of the powerful early Pallava rulers of Kāñcī.

No coins have as yet been attributed to any of the Cuṭu kings known from inscriptions. Some large lead coins from Karwar bearing the title cuṭu-kul-ānamda in the legend are doubtfully assigned to an earlier feudatory member of the Cuṭu family (Rapson, op. cit., p. xliii). The reading hāriti as a portion of the legend on some lead coins found in the Anantapur and Cuddapah districts (loc. cit.) is not quite certain and therefore does not justify in the present state of our knowledge the attribution of those coins to any of the Cuṭu kings.

Besides the coins bearing the legend raño cuṭu-kul-ānamdasa, there are other coins discovered from the Karwar district with the legend raño muḍ-ānamdasa. The expressions cuṭu-kul-ānanda and muḍ-ānanda have been thought to signify respectively "Joy of the family¹ of the Cuṭus" and "Joy of the Muṇḍas." These titles resemble in character that of the Mahārāṭhi Aṅgika-kula-varḍhana, "the cherisher of the race of Anga." They have been taken to be dynastic. According to Rapson, these may be designations attached to particular localities or titles derived from the home or race of the rulers. Cuṭu evidently signifies the Cuṭu-Sātakarni family. The Muṇḍas are frequently mentioned in Sanskrit literature. The Viṣṇu-Purāṇa (IV, 24, 14) speaks of thirteen Muṇḍa kings who ruled after the Andhras, (i.e., Sātavāhanas). "It is perhaps, more probable that the kings bearing these titles were members of two families of feudatories in the early period of the dynasty, and that, at a later period, on the decline of the empire, one of these families gained the sovereign power in the western and southern provinces, while the eastern provinces remained in the possession of the Sātavāhana family" (Rapson, op. cit., p. xxiii).

ORIGIN OF THE KADAMBAS ¹

In almost all Kadamba inscriptions the Kadambas claim to have belonged to the Mānavya gotra and call themselves Hāritīputra.² The designation Mānavyagotra-Hāritīputra was evidently borrowed from the Cuṭu Sātakarṇis who ruled over Kuntala before the rise of the Kadambas. From the Banavasi grant of the eighth year of Mrgeśavarman's reign (Ind. Ant., VII, pp. 35-36) the Kadambas seem to have actually belonged to the Āṅgīrasa gotra.³ This suggestion is possibly supported by the fact that they are called try-ārṣa-vartma (see verse 3 of the Talgunda inscription; Ep. Ind., VIII, p. 31 ff.) which seems to refer to the three pravaras of the Āṅgīrasa gotra, viz., Āṅgīrasa, Vāśiṣṭha and Bārhaspatya (Śabdakalpadruma, s.v. pravara).

According to a very late inscription belonging to the Kadambas of Hangal (Ep. Carn., VII, Sk. 117), the Kadamba family originated from the three-eyed and four-armed Kadamba. This Kadamba is said to have sprung into being under a Kadamba tree from a drop of sweat that fell on the ground from the forehead of Śiva. Kadamba's son was Mayūravarman who conquered the earth by the power of his sword and invincible armour. Another inscription (ibid., XI, Dg. 35) says that Mayūravarman himself was born under an auspicious Kadamba tree, with an eye on his forehead. He is there described as the son of Rudra and the earth. His family became famous as Kadamba owing to the fact that he grew up in the shade of a Kadamba tree. An inscription of A.D. 1077 (ibid, VIII, Sb. 262) gives still more interesting details. There Mayūrarman seems to have been described as the son of the famous Ānanda-jina-vratīndra's sister¹ and as born under the famous Kadamba tree, and to have had the other name Trilocana. A kingdom having been procured for him from the Śāsanadevī and a forest being cleared and formed into a country for that prince, a crown composed of peacock's feathers was placed on his head. From this crown, the prince obtained the name Mayūrarman.

These mythical accounts do not differ materially from those recorded in the inscriptions of the Later Kadambas of Goa. Some of the Halsi and Degamve grants (e.g., ibid, VII, Sk. 236) attribute the origin of the Kadamba family to the three-eyed and four-armed Jayanta otherwise named Trilocona-Kādamba. This Jayanta is said to have sprung from a drop of sweat that fell on the ground near the roots of a Kadamba tree, from the forehead of Śiva when the god killed Tripura after a hard fight.

An inscription of the same period belonging to the Later Kadambas of Nagarakhandā (J.B.B.R.A.S., IX, pp. 245, 272, 285) gives a slightly different story. It says that king Nanda worshipped Śiva for many days with the desire of getting a son. One day some Kadamba flowers suddenly fell down from the sky and a heavenly voice assured him of his getting two brilliant sons in the near future. Thus according to this tradition, the Kadambas claimed relation with the famous Nanda kings of Pāṭaliputra. Some other late Kadamba grants also attribute a northern origin to the

Kadambas. The Kargudari record of the Hangal Kadambaś asserts that Mayūravarman came from the Himalayan regions and brought from Ahicchatra eighteen Brāhmaṇas whom he established in Kuntala (Bomb. Gaz., I, ii, pp. 560-561)¹ According to another record (Ep. Ind., XVI, pp. 354, 360) Mayūravarman is said to have established his power on the summits of the Himavat mountain.

All these traditions are of little historical value. All they may indicate is that the progenitor of the Kadamba family was named Mayūra and that the family-name had an accidental connection with the Kadamba tree. In connection with the tradition regarding the three-eyed Trilocana-Kādamba, it is interesting to note that there are similar accounts of a mythical Trilocana-Pallava in later Pallava inscriptions. This three-eyed Pallava is said to have brought some Brāhmaṇas from Ahicchatra and to have settled them to the east of Śrīparvata where he made seventy agrahāras (An. Rep.-S. Ind. Ep., 1908, pp. 82-88). Later Kadamba inscriptions, as we have noticed, attribute this Brāhmaṇa emigration to Mayūravarman. These facts seem to show that the mythical traditions about the two Pallava and Kadamba Trilocanas had a common origin, though they possibly depended on the development of each other (Moraes, Kadambakula, p. 8 note). As has already been suggested, the evidence of the Mysore records of the twelfth century stating that the Nanda king ruled over Kuntala (Rice, Mysore and Coorg, p. 3), the reference to the wealth of the Nandas in a Tamil poem and the existence of a city called Nau Nand-Dehra in the South may suggest that the Nanda dominions embraced considerable portions of Southern India. In the present state of our knowledge however it is not possible to prove a genealogical connection between the Nandas and the Kadambas. Moreover, the Kadambas, as we shall presently see, were originally Brāhmaṇas, while the Nandas are known from the Purāṇas to have been Kṣatriyas with an admixture of Sūdra blood.

It is clear that all the later traditions connected with the origin of the name Kadamba developed on a reference in a much earlier Kadamba record. It is the Talgunda inscription of king Śāntivarman who ruled about the middle of the fifth century, that is to say, about a century after the establishment of the Kadamba power in Kuntala by Mayūra about the middle of the fourth century A.D. This inscription records (Ep. Ind., VIII, p. 31) that the Kadambas were so named owing to their tending a Kadamba tree that grew near their house (cf. gr̥ha-samīpa-samrūḍha-vikaśat-kadamb-aika-pādapam, tad-upacāravat=tad=āsyā taroḥ s̄nāmya-sādharmyam=asya tat prāvavṛte sātīrthyā-viprāṇāṃ prācuryatas=tad=viśeṣaṇam), and that they belonged to the dvija-kula (Brāhmaṇa family). In this Kadamba-kula was born a person named Mayūraśarman, the best of the Brāhmaṇas (cf. evam=āgate kadamba kule śrīmān=babhūva dvijottamaḥ nāmato mayūraśarm=eti). There seems to be nothing very strange and unbelievable in this simple account. The statement that the Kadambas were Brāhmaṇas is also supported by the evidence of the earliest Kadamba record, the Chandravalli inscription of Mayūra (Mys. Arch. Surv., A.R., 1929, p. 50). In this inscription, the name of the Kadamba king has been given as Mayūra-śarman, and not as Mayūra-varman which form we find only in the inscriptions of the Later Kadambas. Since śarman was used with the names of Brāhmaṇas and varman with that of Kṣatriyas (cf. śarma-vad=brāhmaṇasya syāt, Manu, II, 32; śarmā devaś=ca viprasya varmā trātā ca bhū-bhujah, etc., Yama quoted in Sabdakalpadruma, s.v. śarmā), the progenitor of the Kadamba family was a Brāhmaṇa according to the earliest known Kadamba record, and there is no reason to doubt the truth of the statement. It is not impossible that the Kadambas were originally Brāhmaṇas who migrated from Northern India like many other South Indian royal families, took service under the Śātavāhanas and eventually carved out a principality in the Kuntala country.¹ That they later gave themselves as Kṣatriya is proved by the fact that not only the names of the succeeding kings ended in varman, but Mayūraśarman was himself made Mayūravarmā in all later records of the family. Their case may be compared with that of the Sena kings of Bengal who styled themselves as Brahma-Kṣatriya which possibly means "Brāhmaṇa first and Kṣatriya afterwards," that is to say, "Brāhmaṇa by birth and Kṣatriya by profession."

It is interesting in this connection to note that, like the Kadambas, there were and still are many tribes and families in India, named after particular trees. The Śākyas were a branch of the Ikṣvāku family and were so called owing to their connection with the Śaka tree (cf. śaka-vṛkṣa-praticchannaṃ vāsaṃ yasmāc = ca cakrire, tasmād = ikṣvāku-vaṃśyās = te bhuvi śākyāḥ prakīrtitāḥ; Saundaranandakāvya, I, 24). Coins of a tribe or family called Oḍumbara have been discovered in the Pathankot region (Kangra and Hoshiarpur districts according to Smith, Catalogue, pp. 160-61) and have been assigned to circa 100 B.C. (Rapson, Indian Coins, p. 11). Oḍumbara (Sanskrit Audumbara) appears to be connected with the Udumbara or fig tree. A tribe named Arjunāyana has been mentioned Varāhamihira's Bṛhatsaṃhitā (XIV, 25) and the Allahabad pillar pillar inscription of Samudragupta (circa 350 A.D.). Many coins belonging to this tribe have also been discovered (Indian Coins, p. 11). These Arjunāyanas seem to have been called after the Arjuna tree. The name of the Śibi tribe may also be connected with Śivi or the birch tree. Some coins bearing the legend vaṭasvaka are assigned to about B.C. 200 (ibid, p. 14). Bühler has explained the legend as denoting the Vaṭa (fig. tree) branch of the Aśvaka tribe (Ind. Stud., III, p. 46). It is interesting in this connection to notice that even at the present time the Lari Goālās of Chhota-Nagpur, the Gorāits, Khariās, Kharwars, the Kumhārs of Lohardaga, Muṇḍas, Nāgesars, Orāons, Pans and many other tribes have septs or sections amongst them named after the famous Indian tree Vaṭa (Ficus Indica). (See H. H. Risley, Tribes and Castes of Bengal, II, 1892, pp. 51, 55, 77, 78, 86, 103, 111, 113, 115, etc.) A consideration of modern tribal names seems to suggest that the above tree-names had originally some sort of totemistic significance.

We have already mentioned several Indian tribes and castes bearing the name Vaṭa. There are many such tribes and castes in India, which go by the names of particular trees. Tribal septs are named after the Dumur (fig. tree), bamboo, Palm tree, Jari tree, Mahua tree, Baherwar tree, Kussum tree, Karma tree and many other trees (Risley, op. cit., pp. 61, 78, 87, 96, 97, 103, 105, etc.). Some of these are actually totems, while others appear to have lost their original totemistic significance.¹

It however cannot be proved in the present state of our knowledge whether the Kadambas and the other tribes and families with tree-names were totemistic in the true sense of the term. In this connection it is interesting to note what has been said about the totemism prevalent among the present-day Santals who must originally have been a totemistic people. "Totemism in the truest form is not present amongst the Santals. The Santals of our days do not believe in the actual descent of a clan from its totem, and the few legends of the Santals about the origin of some of their clans do not point to any belief in the descent of men from their totems. All that they indicate is that the totem animal and plant had some accidental connection with the birth of the ancestor of the clan. As for example, the sept Pāuriā is called after the pigeon and Chōre after the lizard; and the story is that on the occasion of a famous tribal hunting party the members of these two septs failed to kill anything but pigeons and lizards; so they were called by the names of these animals."¹ It is interesting also to note that according to the Talgunda inscription and many other later Kadamba records the Kadamba tree "had some accidental connection with the birth" of the family of Mayūrasarman, the ancestor of the Kadambas, exactly as the pigeon and lizard in the family traditions of the two Santal septs called Pāuriā (pigeon) and Chōre (lizard).

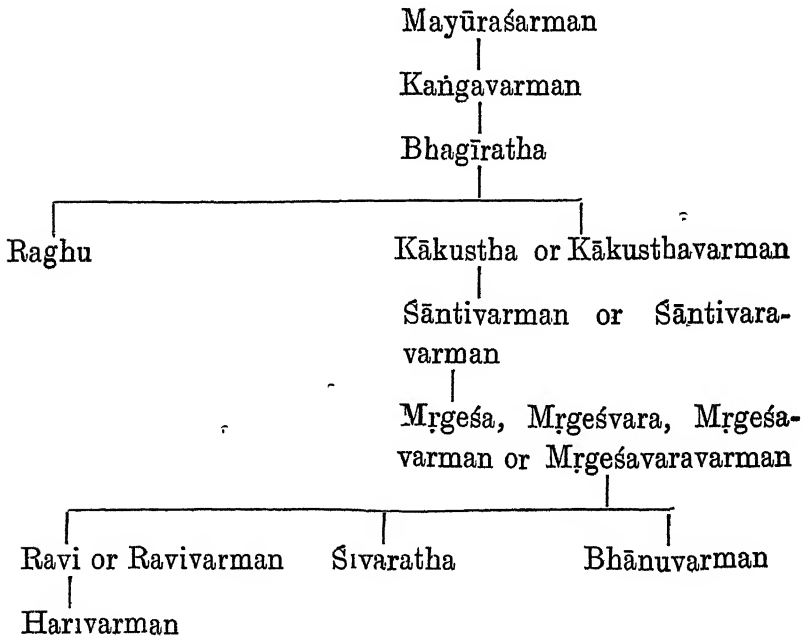

associated with exogamous sub-divisions which might have had a hand in the invention or diffusion of those useful objects. There is no seasonal recurring ceremonial round these objects meant for the preservation or propagation of animals or plants venerated as ancestors as in Australia. There is indeed some taboo to the use by the particular subclan of the plant and animal venerated as its ancestor. The animal and plant thus venerated are taboo to the clans; none can hunt it, nor can they partake of its flesh. But for the observation of this taboo, the Santals are in no sense plant and animal worshippers" (P. C. Biswas, Primitive Religion, etc., of the Santals, Journ. Dept. Let., XXVI, p. 6).

GENEALOGY AND CHRONOLOGY OF THE EARLY KADAMBAS OF MAYŪRAŚARMAN'S LINE

The following genealogy of the Early Kadambas is established by the Talgunda inscription of Śāntivarman and the numerous records of his son, grandson and great-grandson (see Ind. Ant., VI, p. 22) :—

In connection with the discussion on the date of Pallava Sivaskandavarman (above, pp. 161-68 ; also Journ. Ind. Hist., XII, p. 297 ff.), I have tried to prove that Sivaskandavarman ruled in the first quarter of the fourth century A.D. I have also suggested that a comparison of the language of the Chandravalli record

(Mys. Arch. Surv., A.R., 1929, p. 50) with that of the Mayidavolu and Hirahadagalli grants would place the reign of Kadamba Mayūraśarman only a little later than the accession of Sivaskandavarman. The use of ś (1.1) and the numerous double-consonants like mma (1.1), tr, ll (1.2), sth, nd (1.3), etc., appear to prove that the Chandravalli record was engraved after, but not long after, the execution of the grants of Sivaskandavarman. I therefore think that scholars (see Anc. Hist. Dec., p. 95 f.; Kadambakula, chart opp. p. 15) are justified in placing Mayūraśarman about the middle of the fourth century A.D. We may not therefore be far from the mark if we suppose that the date of Mayūra's accession lies somewhere between A.D. 320 and 350.¹

According to the evidence of the Talgunda inscription (Ep. Ind., VIII, p. 31 ff.) of the Kadamba king named Sāntivarman, this Mayūraśarman was followed on the Kadamba throne by his son Kangavarman, grandson Bhagīratha and great-grandson Raghu ; Raghu was succeeded by his brother whose name was Kākusthavarman. Supposing that Mayūraśarman's reign began about the middle of the fourth century and that the reign-periods of the four predecessors of Kākusthavarman (viz., Mayūraśarman, Kangavarman, Bhagīratha and Raghu) together covered about a century, we arrive at about the middle of the fifth century for the period of Kākustha.

The Halsi grant (Ind. Ant., VI, p. 23) of Kākusthavarman, the Yuvarāja (crown-prince) of the Kadambas, was issued in the eightieth year.² Fleet says (Bomb. Gaz., ¹ According to the Talgunda inscription, Mayūraśarman received the pattabandhasampīṭṭā as well as the land between the Western sea and the Prehāra from the Pallava kings of Kāñṇī. We have already suggested that this may have taken place about the time of the great Sivaskandavarman and his father who were possibly suzerains of the whole land bounded by the Arabian sea in the west. See above, p. 184 n.

² In Ind. Ant., XIV, p. 13, it has been suggested to be the eightieth year from the conquest of the Nāgas by Kṛṣṇavarman (I), who however cannot be 80 years earlier than Kākusthavarman.

I, ii, p. 291), “ The year purports by strict translation to be his own eightieth year. But it cannot be the eightieth year of his Yuvarāja-ship ; and, even if such a style of dating were usual, it can hardly be even the eightieth year of his life. It must therefore be the eightieth year from the Paṭṭabandha of his ancestor Mayūraśarman, which is mentioned in the Talgunda inscription.” The beginning of Kākustha’s reign thus falls more than eighty years after Mayūraśarman’s accession (somewhere between circa 320 and 350 A.D.). The record issued when Kākustha-varman was a Yuvarāja thus seems to have been inscribed some time between circa 400 and 430 A.D.¹

Kākusthavarman was succeeded by his son Śāntivarman during whose reign the Talgunda record was engraved. Mr̥geśavarman was the son and successor of Śāntivarman. Thus the two reigns of Kākusthavarman and of Śāntivarman intervened between the date of the Halsi grant when Kākustha was a Yuvarāja (some time between A.D. 400 and 430) and the date of Mr̥geśavarman’s accession. But since we do not know the precise date of Mayūraśarman’s accession and the exact reign-periods of Kākusthavarman and Śāntivarman, it is difficult to conjecture any definite date for the accession of Mr̥geśavarman. It is however almost certain that Mr̥geśa’s rule did not begin earlier than A.D. 415.

Mr̥geśavarman’s last known date is year 8. He was succeeded by his son Ravivarman whose last known inscriptional date is year 35. Ravivarman’s son and successor was Harivarman whose Sangoli grant (Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 165 ff.) was dated in the eighth year of his reign. The date of this record is calculated to be either Tuesday, the

22nd September, 526, or Thursday, the 21st September, 545 A.D. So Harivarman ascended the Kadamba throne either in 519-520 or in 538-539.¹ Since Ravivarman's reign of about 35 years intervened between the end of Mrgeśavarman's rule and the beginning of Harivarman's reign, Mrgeśavarman does not appear to have ended his rule before (538-35=) 503 A.D. Thus we see that the reign of Mrgeśavarman fell in the period between A.D. 415 and 503.

Now, the Banavasī grant (Ind. Ant., VII, pp. 35-36) of Mrgeśavarman gives a verifiable date. This record is said to have been dated in rājyasya tṛtīye varṣe pauṣe samvatsare kārttikamāsa-bahula-pakṣe daśamyān=tithau uttara-bhādrapada-nakṣatre. The date is therefore Pausa year ; month of Kārttika ; Bahula or the dark fortnight ; tenth lunar day ; and Uttara-bhādrapada nakṣatra. This date fell in the third regnal year of Mrgeśavarman. It must first be observed that Bahula is here apparently a mistake for Sukla. The lunar mansion called Uttara-bhādrapada may have chance to occur on the tenth lunar day only of the bright half, and not of the dark half, of the month of Kārttika. We are therefore to find out a Pausa year in the period between A.D. 415 and 503, in which the lunar mansion Uttara-bhādrapada occurred on the tenth tithi of the bright half of Kārttika.

Between A.D. 415 and 503, Pausa years, counted according to the twelve-year cycle of Jupiter, occurred in A.D. 425, 437, 448, 460, 472, 484 and 496; but calculations show that the lunar mansion Uttara-bhādrapada occurred in Kārttika-śukla-daśamī only in A.D. 437 and in 472. On October 24, A.D. 437, Śukla-daśamī continued till 2-5 A.M. in the night; and Uttara-bhādrapada nakṣatra began about

12-15 P.M. in the day. On October 27, A.D. 472, Sukla-daśamī continued till 8-57 P.M. in the night and Uttara-bhādrapada began about 2-31 P.M. in the day. It therefore appears that Mrgeśavarman ascended the Kadamba throne either in A.D. 434-435 or 469-470.¹

Scholars (see Anc. Hist. Dec., pp. 95-96; Kadambakula, chart opp. p. 15) generally place Mrgeśavarman's accession in circa 475 A.D. We would therefore prefer the second alternative, viz., 469-70 A.D.

In this connection we should also note that a Halsi grant (Ind. Ant., VI, p. 24) of king Mrgeśavarman is dated on the full-moon day of Kārttika in his eighth regnal year which was a Vaiśākha samvatsara. We have already seen that the tenth tithi of the bright half of Kārttika of his third year fell in the Pauṣa samvatsara. This fact seems to show that the same lunar day of Kārttika in the next Vaiśākha samvatsara fell in his seventh regnal year. Are we to suppose that the eighth year of Mrgeśavarman's reign began in between the Sukla-daśamī and the full-moon day of Kārttika? Mrgeśavarman would then appear to have ascended the throne on a day between these two tithis.

There were several branches² of the Early Kadambas, the most important of them—besides the direct line of ¹ I am indebted for some calculations to Mr. D. N. Mukherji, B Sc., of the Daulatpur College (Khulna district, Bengal). The calculations are on the heliacal rising system as followed by Dikshit in Fleet's Gupta Inscriptions (Corp. Ins. Ind., III). After the publication of my paper on this subject (Journ. Ind. Hist., XIV, p. 344), I have noticed that in a foot-note at page 353 of his List, the late Mr. Sewell said, "Mrgeśavarman may have come to the throne in A.D. 471. For an inscription of his third year bears a date in A.D. 473, given as in the year Pauṣa, which, in the twelve year cycle=Kīlaka." Sewell appears to have calculated the Pauṣa years according to the mean motions of Jupiter.

² It will be seen that the lines of Mayūraśarman and Kṛṣṇavarman I and a few other lines one of them being that to which king Māndhātavarman belonged, ruled more or less simultaneously over different parts of the Kadamba country. The reference to Calukya Kirtivarman's victory over the kadamba-kadamba-kadambaka (combined army of a confederacy of Kadamba princes?) is interesting to note in this connection. Buddhādatta, the celebrated author of the Vinayavinicchaya, is said to have flourished at Uṇḍapūra (modern Uṇḍiyūr near Tanjore) about the fifth century

Mayūrasārman—being the line of Kṛṣṇavarman I. Since the exact relation of these branch lines with the main line, that is to say, with the line of Mayūrasārman, is not as yet definitely and unquestionably settled, I think it wiser to deal with them separately.

A D. In the ṛṣgamana of that work, he says that he resided in the vihāra of Veṇḍudāsa at Bhūtamaṅgala-on-Kāverī in the Colaraṭṭha and composed the book when the country was being ruled by Accutacutavikkanta who was a kaḷamba-kula nandana. The ṭikā says that the Cola-rāja Accutavikkanta who was kaḷamba-kula-vaṃsa-jāta was ruling the Coḷa-raṭṭha. It has been suggested that king Acyutavikrama belonged to the Kadamba family (see Ind. Cult., I, pp 71-74). Some scholars think that he was a Kalabhra. The suggestion that the Cola country was ruled by a Kadamba or Kalabhra king about the fifth century however cannot be accepted without further evidence. Kaḷamba-kula nandana, i.e., delight of the Kaḷamba=Kadamba (Bomb. Gaz., I, ii, p 558, note 2) or Kadamba family, may suggest that Acyutavikrama's mother was a Kadamba princess. In this connection it is interesting to note that a Pallava king (Pallava-rāja) named Gopāladeva has been described in the Haldipur grant (Ep. Ind., XXI, p 178 ff.) as kaikeya-vaṃś-odbhava which has been taken to indicate that Gopāladeva was connected with the Kaikeyas on his mother's side. Calukya Jayasimha III is described in the records of the family as being born in the Pallava lineage (Bomb. Gaz., I, ii, p. 333), and Fleet suggests that his mother was a Pallava princess. Fleet also suggested (ibid., p 349) that Satyāśraya-Dhruvarāja-Indrarvarman, "an ornament of the Ādi-mahā-Bappūra-vaṃśa," was a son of Calukya Maṅgaleśa and was connected with the Bappūra or Batpūra family on his mother's side. It is also not impossible that the Kamboja-vaṃśa tīlaka Rājyapāla of the Irda grant is the same as king Rājyapāla of the Pāla dynasty, whose mother was a Kamboja princess. See my note in Journ. Andhra Hist. Res. Soc., X, p. 227 f.

MAYŪRĀŚARMAN

We have seen that according to the Talgunda inscription the Kadambas belonged to a Brāhmaṇa family devoted to the study of the Vedas. There the family has been described as tryārṣa-vartma, hāriti-putra and mānavya-gotra. In this family of dvijas was born an illustrious and learned Brāhmaṇa named Mayūraśarman who went with his preceptor Vīrasimha to Kāñcīpura, the Pallava capital, in order to prosecute his Vedic studies. There Mayūraśarman was drawn in a quarrel with the Pallavas,¹ and considering the illtreatment he received a dishonour to the Brāhmaṇas, "he unseathed a flaming sword eager to conquer the world." He then easily defeated the frontier guards of the Pallava kings (antaḥ-pālān pallav-endrāṇām)² and established himself in a dense forest near Śrīparvata. His power gradually increased, and he levied tributes from the Brhad-Bāṇas³ and other kings. At length a compromise was brought in, and Mayūraśarman accepted service under the Pallava kings of Kāñcī, from whom he received the paṭṭabandha-saṃpūjā, that is to say, the status of a subordinate ruler, as well as the territory extending from the Aparārṇava (Western or Arabian Sea) and the Prekāra (river ?) with a specification that no other chief would enter into it. The eightieth year of an unknown era by which the Halsi grant of Kākusthavarman (Ind. Ant., VI, p. 23) is dated, is supposed by some scholars to have begun from this time.

³ Brhad-Bāṇa appears to mean the great Bāṇa or the greater house of the Bāṇas. Cf. Perumbāṇappāḍi in Tamil.

Mayūraśarman is said in the Talgunda inscription (v. 20) to have entered into the service of the Pallava kings and to have pleased them by acts of bravery in battles. He seems to have become a daṇḍanāyaka (field-marshal) of the Pallava king of Kāñcī. This view is further supported by verse 3 of the same inscription in which the Kadamba family is called the great lineage of leaders of armies (kadamba-senānī¹-brhad-ancaya), as well as by verse 22 in which Mayūraśarman is said to have been favoured² and anointed Senāpati (general) by Śaḍānana and the Mothers³ (ṣaḍānanaḥ yam = abhiṣikta- vān=anudhyāya senāpatiṃ mātṛbhīḥ saha).¹ In this connection it is interesting to note that in almost all the Kadamba records the family has been described as anudhyāta (favoured) by Svāmi-Mahāsena (Śaḍānana) and the Mothers. It must also be noticed in this connection that the Sirsi grant (Ep. Ind., XVI, p. 264) of Ravivarman describes the king as Kadamba-mahāsenāpati-pratima.²

² The word anudhyāta is generally taken to be in the active use to mean "meditating on..." In the passage in question the verb anu-dhyat is evidently used in the passive to mean "to favour," "to bless." That the word anudhyāta should be taken in the passive to mean "favoured" is also proved by passages like mahāsena-mātrgaṇ-ānudhyāt-abhiṣikta in which the other word abhiṣikta is used in the passive. Note also a similar passage of the Calukya grants which says that the family "acquired an uninterrupted continuity of prosperity through the favour and protection of Kārttikeya" (Bomb. Gaz., I, II, p. 337). The common phrase bappa-bhaṭṭāraka-pād ānudhyata means "favoured (or, blessed) by the feet of the (or, the noble) lord, the father."

A very late inscription found at Talgunda (Ep. Carn., VII, Sk. 178) says that Mayūraśarman (or Mayūravarman as there written) performed no less than eighteen horse-sacrifices. G. M. Moraes says, "It may safely be maintained that he really performed one or perhaps a few more which thus formed a historical foundation for the exaggerated version of the later records." The suggestion is however untenable in view of the fact that Mayūraśarman is never credited with the performance of any sacrifice not only in his own Chandravalli record but also in the inscriptions of his immediate successors. The Kadamba family is said to have been rendered pure by the bath of the Aśvamedha only after the time of Kṛṣṇavarman I who is the only Kadamba ruler known to have performed the horse-sacrifice.

The Chandravalli inscription of Mayūraśarman (Mys. Arch. Surv., A., R., 1929, p. 50) records the construction of a tank by the king who belonged to the Kadamba family and conquered the Trekūṭa, Ābhīra, Pallava, Pāriyātrika, Śakasthāna, Sayindaka, Puṇāṭa and Mokari. This record by nursing him who formed six months to suckle them simultaneously (cf. Skanda's names, Kārttikeya, Śaḍānana, Śaṇmātura, etc.) See Bomb Gaz., I, II, p. 337 and note is engraved on a boulder at the entrance of the Bhairaveśvara temple at Chandravalli in the Chitaldrug district of Mysore, and is so obliterated that it is difficult to be definite as regards the reading of some of the names mentioned in connection with Mayūraśarma's conquests.

I. Trekūṭa appears to signify the Traikūṭakas who probably received their name from the Trikūṭa mountain in Aparānta, mentioned by Kālidāsa (Raghu, IV, verses 58-59). An inscription (Arch. Surv. W. Ind., p. 124f) of the Vākāṭaka king Hariṣeṇa (circa 500-520) refers to the kingdom of Trikūṭa. The copper-plate grants of the Traikūṭaka kings are all discovered in the neighbourhood of Surat and Kanheri (Bhandarkar, List, Nos. 1199, 1200, 1202, etc.). The Kanheri grant of the year 245 (A.D. 493-94) of the augmenting sovereignty of the Traikūṭakas refers to a monastery at Kṛṣṇagiri (Kanheri) itself. The Pardi inscription of Dahrasena is dated in year 207 (A.D. 455-56). The date of the Surat inscription of Vyāghrasena is the Traikūṭaka year 232 (A.D. 479-80). The evidence of the Traikūṭaka inscriptions thus shows that the family ruled in Southern Gujarat and the Koṅkaṇ about the second half of the fifth century. It is possible that the Traikūṭakas ruled in the same place also about the time of Mayūraśarma. The era used in the Traikūṭaka inscriptions is said to be the same as the Kalacuri or Cedi era which begins from A.D. 248-49 (Rapson, op. cit., pp. clx-xlxi; Bomb. Gaz., I. ii, p. 294.)

Traikūṭaka coins have been discovered not only in Southern Gujarat and the Koṅkaṇ, but also in the Marāṭhā country on the other side of the Ghats. Bhagwanlal Indraji noticed a Traikūṭaka coin mentioning the Parama-vaiṣṇava Mahārāja Rudragana ('sena), son of Mahārāja Indradatta (Bomb. Gaz., I. ii, p. 295 n.). The fact that the Traikūṭaka coin-types are very closely imitated from the Western Kṣatrapa coins shows that they were intended for circulation in districts where the Western Kṣatrapa coins had become familiar to the people. "Local conservatism in regard to coin-types is a marked characteristic of Indian numismatics" (Rapson, loc. cit.). It is therefore clear that the country of the Traikūṭakas was originally a part of the dominions of the Śaka kings of Ujjain. According to the Ajanta inscription (Arch. Surv. W. Ind., IV, p. 138 ff.) the Trikūṭa country was conquered by the Vākāṭaka king Hariṣeṇa who appears to have ruled about the beginning of the sixth century A.D.

II. The earliest mention of the Ābhīras seems to be that in Patañjali's Mahābhāṣya, I, 252 (Ind. Ant., XLVII, p. 36). There they are associated with the Sūdras. According to a verse of the Mahābhārata, these two tribes lived near the place where the Sarasvatī lost itself into the sands (cf. IX, 37, 1: sūdr-ābhīrān prati dveṣād = yatra naṣṭā sarasvatī). In another place however the epic places the Ābhīras in Aparānta (II, 51). The country of the Ābhīras has been mentioned as Abiria in the Periplus and as Abēria in the Geography of Ptolemy. According to the Greek geographer (Geog., VII, i, § 55), the land about the mouth of the Indus was generally called Indo-Scythia which consisted of three countries, viz., Patalênê (Indus delta), Abēria (Ābhīra country) and Surastrênê (Kathiawar).

The Purāṇas (e.g., Vayu, 99, v. 359) mention the Ābhīras who ruled after the Andhras (Śātavāhanas). An Ābhīra chief named Rudrabhūti is known to have served as general of a Śaka king of Ujjain. The Gunda inscription of Śaka 103 (A.D. 181), belonging to the reign of Rudra-siṃha I, records the digging of a tank by the Ābhīra general Rudrabhūti. It is also known that for a time the Śaka Satraps of Western India were shadowed by an Ābhīra king named Māḍharīputra Īśvarasena, son of Śīvadatta. The Nasik inscription (Ep. Ind., VIII, p. 88) of this king records the investment of 1,500 kārṣāpaṇas in the trade-guilds.

of Govardhana (Nasik) for the purpose of providing medicines to the monks dwelling in the monastery on the Tiriraśmi mountain.¹ Coins of a Mahākṣatrapa named Īśvaradatta have been found in Kathiawar. These are silver coins of the same style and type as the coins of the Śaka Kṣatrapas. Īśvaradatta dates his coins in the regnal year and not in the Śaka era like the Western Kṣatrapas. According to Bhagwanlal Indraji, Īśvaradatta was probably an Ābhīra connected with the dynasty of Īśvarasena of the Nasik inscription, and it was Īśvaradatta who founded the Traikūṭaka era of A.D. 248-49. Rapson however has no doubt that Īśvaradatta reigned between A.D. 236 and 239,² that is to say, about ten years before the establishment of the Traikūṭaka era. It is not possible to determine whether the Ābhīras and the Traikūṭakas belonged to the same dynasty or race. It may however be said that the two groups of kings ruled over substantially the same territory and had a similar formation of names, which facts possibly suggest some sort of relation that may have existed between the Ābhīras and the Traikūṭakas (Rapson, loc. cit.).

III. We have already discussed the question of Mayūraśarman's quarrel with the Pallavas of Kāñcī. About the beginning of the fourth century, the Pallavas appear to have held sway not only over Andhrāpāṭha and Sātāhanirāṭṭha (Bellary district) in the north and the north-west, but possibly also over the Kuntala country in the west.

IV. Pāriyātrika seems to signify the people dwelling on the Pāriyātra mountain, which may be identified with the Aravelly Range and the Western Vindhya. According to the Purāṇas (Vāyu, 45, 97-98; Mārkaṇḍeya, 57, 19-20), rivers like the Mahī, Carmanvatī (Chambal), Barnāsā (Banās), Sīprā and Vetravatī have their origin in the Pāriyātra or Pāripātra.

² Bhandarkar places the rule of Mahākṣatrapa Īśvaradatta between 188 and 190 A.D.

V. Sakasthāna is the country of the Śakas. It has been mentioned by the author of the Periplus (§ 38) as Scythia which was situated in the Lower Indus valley and was under the rule of Parthian chiefs, engaged in unceasing internecine strife. As has already been noticed, the Indian Śaka country is described in the Geography (VII, i, § 55) of Ptolemy as Indo-Scythia which included Patalênê, Abêria and Surastrênê. At the timê of Mayūraśarman (middle of the fourth century A.D.), Sakasthāna seems to have signified the kingdom of the Śaka kings of Ujjain. The line of the Śakas of Ujjain was founded by Castana (a contemporary of the Greek geographer Ptolemy) in the first half of the second century. The Śakas continued their rule in that locality up to the beginning of the fifth century when Chandragupta II of the Imperial Gupta dynasty of Magadha conquered Mālhwā from Śaka Rudrasimha III (Rapson, Catalogue, p. cxlix ff. ; Allan, Catalogue, p. xxxviii f).

VI. Sayindaka has been suggested to be the same as the country of the Sendrakas. The Sendrakas are known to be of Nāga origin and their country is generally identified with the Nāyarkhaṇḍa or Nāgarakhaṇḍa division of the Banavāsī province, which possibly formed a part of the present Shimoga district of Mysore. The Sendraka-viṣaya is known to have been included in the dominions of the Kadamba king Kṛṣṇavarman II. The Bennur grant (Ep. Carn., V, p. 594) of Kṛṣṇavarman II records the gift of a village called Palmaḍi which was in the Sendraka-viṣaya. A Sendraka chief named Bhānuśakti seems to have been a feudatory of the Kadamba king Harivarman (see the Halsi grant of the eighth year of Harivarman's reign; Ind. Ant., VI, p. 31). After the fall of the Kadambas the Sendrakas transferred their allegiance to the Calukyas of Bādāmi, who succeeded the Kadambas in the rule of the Kuntala region. A record of Pulakeśin I (Ind. Ant., VII, p. 211 ff.), who was the first great emperor of the Calukya dynasty, mentions the Sendraka rājā Rundranīla Goṇḍa, his son Sīvāra and grandson Sāmiyāra who ruled the Kuhunḍī-viṣaya (Belgaum district) with its headquarters at Alaktaka-nagarī.¹ The Chiplun grant (Ep. Ind., III, p. 50 ff.) says that the Sendraka prince Śrī-vallabha Senānanda-rāja was the maternal uncle of Pulakeśin II. An inscription (J.B.B.R.A.S., XVI, pp. 228-29) of the tenth year of Vikramāditya I mentions the Sendraka chief Devaśakti who appears to have been his feudatory. According to the evidence of the Balagami record (Ind. Ant., XIX, p. 142; Ep. Carn., VIII, Sk. 154), the Sendraka Mahārāja Pogilli, a feudatory of Calukya Vinayāditya I, ruled over the Nāyarkhaṇḍa division which had a village called Jedugūr, identified by Fleet with Jedda in the Sorab taluka of the Shimoga district. The crest of the family of Pogilli was the elephant (Bomb. Gaz., I, ii, p. 192). In connection with a certain Satyāśraya (Pulakesin II?) a Lakshmesvar inscription mentions the Sendra (i.e., Sendraka) king Durgaśakti, son of Kumāraśakti and grandson of Vijayaśakti.

VII. Puṇāṭa has been taken to be the same as modern Puṇṇāḍu in the southern part of Mysore. Ptolemy seems to have mentioned it (Geog., VII, i, § 86) as Pounnata where beryls were found. The country or district of Puṇnāṭa was adorned by the rivers Kāverī and Kapinī. The capital of this ancient kingdom was Kīrtipura (Kittūr) on the Kapinī (Kabbani) river in the Heggadevanakōṭe taluka. The Komāraliṅgam and Māmballi plates (Ind. Ant., XII, p. 13; Mys. Arch. Surv., A.R., 1917, pp. 40-41) belonging to early

Punnāṭa rulers speak of the kings named Viṣṇudāsa, Rāṣṭra-varman, Nāgadatta, Bhujaga (son-in-law of Gāṅga Mādhava-Simhavarman ?), Skandavarman and Ravidatta, who belonged to the Tāmraśāyapa kula. According to the Gaṅga records, Gaṅga Avinīta, father of Durvinīta, married the daughter of Skandavarman, king of Punnāṭa. Gaṅga Durvinīta is known to have had a very long reign which covered more than forty years and, as we shall see, the Gaṅga king probably helped his daughter's son, Calukya Vikramāditya I, in securing the throne of Bādāmi about 654 A.D. The Punnāṭa king Skandavarman, Durvinīta's mother's father, must therefore have reigned in the second half of the sixth century. Some of the Gaṅga records assert that the Punnāṭa country formed a part of Durvinīta's kingdom. The country may have passed to Durvinīta as the heir of his maternal grandfather.¹

VIII. Mokarī has been taken to signify the Maukharis of Eastern and Northern India. Inscriptions of the Maukhari kings have been discovered in the Jaunpur and Barabanki districts of U. P. and in the Gaya district of Bihar (Bhandarkar, op. cit., Nos. 10, 1601-1605; Corp. Ins. Ind., III, Intro. p. 14). The Haraha inscription (Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 115) of Maukhari Īśānavarman is dated in Vikrama 611 (A.D. 544). About the sixth century a line of the Maukharis is known to have established themselves in the Kanauj region. Maukhari Grahavarman of this line married the sister of the illustrious Harṣavardhana (A.D. 606-647) of the Puṣyabhūti family of Thāneswar. The Chandravalli record however seems to refer to the Maukharis of Rajputana. Three inscribed yūpas (Kṛta year 295=A.D. 238) of a feudatory Maukhari family have been found at Baḍvā in the Kotah state (Ep. Ind., XXIII, p. 42 ff.).

¹ Dr. B. A. Salstoe has written a paper on the kingdom of Punnāṭa in Ind. Cult., III (October, 1936), p. 302 ff. His chronology is however based on the theories that Mayūrasarman ruled about the middle of the third century, and that Gaṅga Durvinīta reigned in the last quarter of the fifth century, which I consider to be inadmissible. Dubreuil's chronology is more reasonable (Anc. Hist. Dec., pp. 107-9).

It is interesting in this connection to note that the tentative reading of the Chandravalli record does not speak of the Bāṇas who are, according to the evidence of the Talgunda record of Śāntivarman, known to have been harassed by Mayūrasarman. The Bāṇas were a very ancient ruling family in the Chittoor and North Arcot districts. According to Hultzsch (S. Ind. Ins., III, p. 89) the capital of the Bāṇa dynasty seems to have been Tiruvallam which had the other name Vānapuram and belonged to the district of Perumbāṇappāḍi (the country of the Great Bāṇa). Tiruvallam is 40 miles west by north of Conjeeveram. On the evidence of the Penukonda Plates (Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 331), it may be suggested that about the middle of the fifth century A.D., the Pallava kings Simhavarman and Skandavarman installed the Gaṅga feudatories Āyyavarman and his son Mādhava-Simhavarman for the purpose of crushing the Bāṇas who had possibly become unruly. The early history of the Bāṇas is wrapped up in obscurity. The earliest rulers of the family, whose time is known, are Vikramāditya-Bali-Indra who was a vassal of Calukya Vijayāditya (A.D. 696-733), and Vikramāditya who governed the country, "West of the Telugu Road," as a vassal of Pallava Nandivarman II (A.D. 717-79). See Hultzsch, Ep. Ind., XVII, p. 3 ff., Sewell, List, p. 328.

According to Dr. M. H. Krishna (Mys. Arch. Surv., A.R., 1929, p. 56), the Chandravalli inscription is to be assigned to circa 258 A.D. He suggests that the rise of Mayūra is to be placed between A.D. 250 and 260. All his arguments are however based on an untenable view regarding the date of Pallava Sivaskandavarman whom he places about the end of the first half of the third century A.D. It appears that Dr. Krishna too is inclined to place Mayūrasarman only a little later than Sivaskandavarman. Pallava Sivaskandavarman, as I have already shown, ruled in the first quarter of the fourth century. Mayūrasarman, the language of whose Chandravalli record is a little more developed than that of the grants of Śivaskandavarman, should therefore be placed not earlier than the first quarter of the fourth century A.D.

The Malavalli inscription (Ep. Carn., VII, Sk. 264) possibly also belongs to king Mayūraśarman. Here however the issuer of the grant is simply said to have been kadam-bānaṃ rājā (king of the Kadambas) and vaijayantī-dhamma-mahārājādhirāja (Dharma-Mahārājādhirāja¹ of Vaijayantī or Banavāsī) ; but the name of the king is not mentioned. Nevertheless, as the Prakrit language of the record is later than that of the grants of Śivaskandavarman, the issuer of the Malavalli grant must have been either Mayūraśarman himself or his immediate successor.

The grant was executed in the fourth year of the king's reign, on the second lunar day of the first fortnight of autumn, under the first asterism Rohiṇī. The grant was in the form of a Bahma-dijja (Brahma-deya) which was meant for the enjoyment (deva-bhoga) of the god Maḷapaḷdeva. It consisted of a number of villages which are said to have been previously granted by king Mānavyagotra Hārītiputra Śivaskandavarman, lord of Vaijayantī.¹ The Brahmadeya was granted for a second time, with all the parihāras including abhāṭa-praveśa, to a Brāhmaṇa named Kauśikīputra Nāgadatta of the Koṇṇinya (Kaṇḍinya) gotra, who is said to have been an ornament of the Koṇḍamāna-kula. The necessity of granting for a second time is said to have been the fact that the ownership of the estate was abandoned. The villages granted were Sōmapaṭṭi, Konginagara, Marīyasā, Karpendulā, Para-Muccundī, Kunda-Muccundī, Kappennalā, Kunda-Tapuka, Velaki, Vegūra, Koṇa-Tapuka, Ekkatṭhāhāra and Sahalā. The king's oral order seems to have been written down by Viśvakarman and engraved on the stone-column by Nāgadatta who is possibly not the same as the donee.

The grant begins with an adoration to Malapalīdeva and ends with the maṅgala: jayati lokanātha[h] nandaṁtu go-brāhmaṇā[h] ; siddhir=astu ; śrīr=astu. This Sanskrit maṅgala at the end of a Prakrit grant reminds us of a similar maṅgala at the end of the Hirabadagalli Prakrit grant of Śivaskandavarman. Many of the Sanskrit grants of Mayūraśarman's successors also end with similar mangalas.

The above inscription is engraved on a pillar in front of the Kallesvara temple at Malavalli in the Shikarpur taluka as a continuation of, as has already been noticed, an inscription dated in the first year of Mānavyagotra Hārītiputra Viṇhukaḍḍa Cuṭukulānanda Śātakarni, king of Vija-yantī (Banavāsī). This grant also begins with an adoration to the god Maṭṭapalideva for whose enjoyment a Devabhoga was granted in the king's first regnal year on the first lunar day of the second fortnight of summer. The Devabhoga was in the form of a Bahmadijja (Brahmadeya) of the grāmahāra (group of villages ?) of Sahalāṭavī which was granted to Takiñcīputra Koṇḍamāna who has been called Hāritīputra and is said to have belonged to the Kaunḍinya gotra, with all the parihāras like abhaṭapraveśa and others.

It must be noticed that the Malavalli record of the Kadamba king also mentions Sahalā (cf. the grāmahāra of Sahalāṭavī of the present grant) and there the donee is one who belonged to the family of this Koṇḍamāna (kondamana-kula-tīlaka). Since the linguistic and palaeographical standards of the two Malavalli records agree in placing them very near each other in time, I think it possible that the Koṇḍamāna-kula-tīlaka Kauśikīputra Nāgaḍatta of the Kaunḍinya gotra (donee of the Kadamba grant) was the son of Takiñcīputra-Hāritīputra Koṇḍamāna of the Kaunḍinya gotra (donee of the Cuṭu Śātakarni grant).¹ We should however notice the facts that in the Kadamba record the twelve villages including Sahalā are said to have been previously granted by a Vaijayantī-pati named Śivaskandavarman and that the ownership of the estate is said to have been abandoned. It may be supposed that Sahalā was granted by Vinhukaḍḍa Cuṭukulānanda Śātakarni, while the eleven other villages were granted by Śivaskandavarman who was possibly the former's immediate successor. It is however possible to suggest that the grāmahāra of Sahalāṭavī consisted of the twelve villages mentioned. In the terminology of later inscriptions it would be like "the Sahalā Twelve" or "the Sahalā-mahāgrāma." The cause of abandoning the ownership of the estate by the heir of Koṇḍamāna seems to have been the political troubles caused by the rise of Mayūraśarman. The case appears to be the same as that suggested in connection with Śivaśarman who received the village of Polamuru from Mādhavavarman I Viṣṇukunḍin, and with his son Rudraśarman who fled to Asanapura during the Calukya invasions and received back his father's agrahāra from Jayasimha I Eastern Calukya when the latter was established in the Guddavādi viṣaya (see above, p. 107 ff.)

The order of king Vinhukaḍḍa Cuṭukulānanda Sātākarni for the execution of the Malavallī grant is said to have been given to a Rajjuka whose name was possibly Mahābhava. Rajjuka (from rajju) has been taken to be the same as a class of officials described by Megasthenes (McCrindle, Ancient India, pp. 53-54). These officials are said to have measured the land, collected taxes, superintended rivers and the occupations connected with land, enjoyed the power of rewarding and punishing, inspected sluices, constructed roads and carried out other works of public utility. Some of these have been described as the functions of the Rajjuka or Rajju-gāhaka-amacca in the Kurudhamma-Jātaka. From the inscriptions of Aśoka we know that the Rājūkas (i.e., Rajjukas) were appointed over many hundred thousands of men and were placed in direct charge of the jānapada jana; they therefore seem to have been the highest district officers (see Bhandarkar, Aśoka, 2nd ed., pp. 59-60). The Rajjukas were possibly employed in this region when Kuntala formed a part of the Maurya empire. The existence of such an official in South-Western Deccan about the beginning of the fourth century shows that the official machinery of the Maurya age was still functioning in Southern India (see Raychaudhuri, op. cit., p. 321).

KAṆGAVARMAN, BHAGĪRATHA AND RAGHU

According to the Talgunda inscription, Mayūraśarman was succeeded by his son Kaṅgavarman. In the Satara treasure trove four Kadamba coins have been found to bear the legend skandha which Moraes takes to be a mistake for kaṅga (op. cit., p. 382). The suggestion however is doubtful. Another writer suggests (see Journ. Ind. Hist., XII, p. 361) that Skanda was the real name of the son of Mayūraśarman and that he was the same as Sivaskandavarman of the Malavalli record. We have already shown (above, pp. 166-67) that the identification of the names Sivaskanda and Skanda is not quite happy. It has also been proved that Sivaskandavarman of the Malavalli record did not belong to the Kadamba family, but was possibly a scion of the Cuṭu Śātakarṇi dynasty of Kuntala.

The same Talgunda inscription says that Kangavarman was succeeded on the Kadamba throne by his son Bhagīratha. The coins in the cabinet of the Indian Historical Research Institute (St. Xavier's College, Bombay) with the representation of lions and the word śrī and with the legend bhagī in Hale-Kannada characters have been taken to be the issues of this king (Kadambakula, p. 382). But the Kadamba coins (even if the Early Kadambas issued coins) have not yet been studied, and we are not definite if these coins can be assigned to the Kadambas.

Rev. Heras has pointed out (J.B.O.R.S., XII, p. 458 ff.) that the story of Kālidāsa being sent as an embassy of Vikramāditya (possibly Candragupta II of the Gupta dynasty) to the court of the king of Kuntala is referred to in the Śrngāraprakāśa of Bhoja and possibly also in the Aucitya-vicāracarā of Kṣemendra (not of Hemacandra; see Ind. Hist. Quart., IX, p. 200). He suggests that this Kuntala king was Bhagīratha and that Kālidāsa was sent in order to contract a matrimonial alliance that has been referred to in a passage of the Talgunda inscription which says that Kākusthavarman, son of Bhagīratha, married his daughters in the families of the Guptas and other kings. The theory of Rev. Heras however seems to me to be based on a tissue of assumptions. As has already been pointed out by N. Lakshminarayana Rao (Ind. Hist. Quart., IX, p. 199), in the passage of the Talgunda record, king Kākusthavarman, and not his father Bhagīratha, has been credited with the family alliance. We have already suggested that Kākusthavarman appears to have ruled in the first half of the fifth century A.D. He was therefore contemporary of the Guptaking Kumāragupta I (circa 415-455 A.D.), the successor of Candragupta II (circa 375-415 A.D.). It is possible that a son or a grandson of any of these Gupta kings was the son-in-law of Kadamba Kākusthavarman.¹

¹ Dr. S. K. Aiyangar (The Vākātakas and their place in Indian History, p. 41 ff) and, apparently following him, Mr. N. Lakshminarayana Rao (Ind. Hist. Quart., IX, p. 200) think that the king of Kuntala to whom Candragupta II is supposed to have sent an embassy was a king of the Vākātakā dynasty. It is pointed out that the Bharatacarita (An Bhānd. Or Res. Inst., V, p. 46) mentions the author of the well known Prakrit poem Setubandha as a Kuntaleśa, while Bāṇa in the Harṣacarita (Intro., verso 14) tells us that the poem was composed by Pravarasena, who has been identified with Pravarasena II of the Vākātakā dynasty. According to them, the Vākātakas were also known as "Lords of Kuntala." The theory is however untenable in view of the fact that the country of Kuntala has been described as a separate political unit in the records of the Vākātakas themselves. According to the Balaghat plates (Ep. Ind., IX, p. 260 ff), Narendrasena, son of Pravarasena II, was married to Ajjhita-Bhatṭurikā who was the daughter of the lord of Kuntala. The Ajanta inscription (Arch. Surv. W. Ind., IV, p. 138 ff.) says that the Vākātakā king Prthivisena, father (? grandfather) of Pravarasena II, conquered the lord of Kuntala. That the Kuntala country did not form a part of the Vākātakā dominions is also proved by the fact that according to the same inscription, Harṣeṇa who was the last great king of the Vākātakā dynasty claims to have conquered Kuntala once again. Of course, the Kadambas of Kuntala may, for some time, have acknowledged the suzerainty of the Vākātakas; but that would hardly justify Pravarsena II being called kuntal-eśa. Moreover, the Purāṇas (e.g., Vāyu, 99, 365-66) describe the Vākātakas as vaidisaka (belonging to Vidiśā), and the Vākātaka grants show that the Vākātakas ruled from the Vīdarbha region in northern Deccan (see Bhandarkar, List, Nos 1703-13).

The mention of a Vākātaka king as "Lord of Kuntala" in the Bharatavarsha only shows that its author lived in (or referred to) a period when the name Kuntala extended over the greater part of Western and Southern India, e.g., in the age of the Calukyas who have been described as Kuntalar, "Lords of Kuntala," in the Kaṅgattuparani (see above, p 215, note 3). The Early Calukyas may be supposed to have been political successors of the Vākātakas in the Deccan.

KĀKUSTHAVARMAN AND ŚĀNTIVARMAN

Raghu was succeeded by his younger brother Kākusthavarman¹ who was possibly ruling the Palāśikā division of the Kadamba kingdom as a governor during his elder brother's reign. Only one inscription of Kākusthavarman has so far been discovered.

The grant of Kākusthavarman (Ind. Ant., VI, p. 23) begins with the word namaḥ, and a verse² which says, "Victorious is the holy Jinendra who abounds in good qualities and is renowned as being extremely compassionate, and the banner of whose tenderness which comforts the three worlds is lifted up on high." Some of the grants of Mṛgeśavarman and Ravivarman begin with the same verse.

The grant was issued from Palāśikā (modern Halsi on the road to Nandigarh in the Bīdi taluka of the Belgaum district) in the eightieth year of Kākusthavarman, the Yuvarāja of the Kadambas, who claimed to have enjoyed the general good wish of the subjects. "We have already seen that the date of Kākusthavarman's grant is supposed to "be the eightieth year from the paṭṭabandha of his ancestor Mayūraśarman, which is mentioned in the Talgunda inscription." But since there is no proof that the Kadambas had any era like that, it may not be unreasonable that the date should be referred to the era of the Gupta with whom Kākustha was matrimonially related.

By this grant a field called Badovara-kṣetra in the village called Kheṭa-grāma, which belonged to the holy Arhats who are said to be the refuge of the created beings and the saviours of the three worlds, was given to the general Śrutakīrti as a reward for saving the prince. It is said that the confiscators of the field, belonging to the king's own family or of any other dynasty, would be guilty of the pañca-mahāpātaka. According to the Jains, the five great sins are destruction of life, lying, stealing, unchastity and immoderate desire. The grant ends with the usual imprecatory verses and the adoration: namo namo; ṛṣabhāya namaḥ. Ṛṣabha is the first Arhat and the first of the twenty-four Jain tīrthankaras (sanctified teachers) of the present age.

As we have already seen, the Talgunda inscription says that king Kākusthavarman "by means of his rays which were his daughters caused to expand the splendid lotus-groups which were the royal families of the Guptas and others." In this connection it is interesting to note that, in the Balaghat plates (Ep. Ind., IX, p. 270 f.), the Vākāṭaka king Pṛthivīśena II is said to have been the son of Narendrasena by the Mahādevī Ajjhitabhaṭṭārikā who was the daughter of the lord of Kuntala. The Vākāṭaka prince Narendrasena was grandson of Prabhāvatīguptā, daughter of Candragupta II. Dubreuil thinks (Anc. Hist. Dec., p. 100) that Vākāṭaka Narendrasena, great-grandson of Candragupta II, was the son-in-law of Kākusthavarman and that the Talgunda record refers to this indirect relation of the Kadambas with the Guptas. If this suggestion is to be believed Ajjhitabhaṭṭārikā was a daughter of Kākusthavarman. It is however also possible that another daughter of Kākustha was actually given in marriage to a Gupta prince of Pāṭaliputra, who was possibly a son or grandson of Candragupta II or Kumārāgupta I.

of the doorway of the Pranaveśvara temple at Talgunda, which speaks of a certain Kākustha of the Bhaṭāri dynasty¹ and of his mother Lakṣmī who is said to have been born in the Kadamba family. Since Kākusthavarman is known to have had several daughters and since grandsons are sometimes seen to bear the names of the maternal grand-fathers (cf. E. Calukya names Rājarāja and Rājendra), it is possible that Lakṣmī, the mother of the Bhaṭāri chief Kākustha, was another daughter of the Kadamba king Kākusthavarman. Thus Kākusthavarman appears to have been matrimonially related to the Guptas, Vākātakas and the Bhaṭāris.

The son of Kākusthavarman was king Śāntivarman. The famous Talgunda inscription was engraved at the time of this ruler. The Talgunda inscription begins with an adoration to Śiva and a verse eulogising the god.² It records the construction of a tank in the premises of a siddhālaya (temple) of lord Bhava (i.e., Śiva) by Kākusthavarman. It is also said that the siddhālaya was formerly abhyarcita (worshipped at) by Sātakarṇi (possibly a king of the Cuṭu family) and others. The record ends with the following maṅgala: nandatu sarva-samant-āgato = 'yam = adbhīdasaḥ ; svasti prajā-bhyaḥ. It is sometimes supposed that the Talgunda record was engraved by Śāntivarman when he was a governor of Sthānakundūra (Talgunda) during the reign of his father. But passages like grheṣu yasya lakṣmy-āṅganā dhṛtimatī sucirāṃ ca reme, yam.....sāmanta-cūḍā-manayaḥ praṇemuh, etc., show that king Kākusthavarman was dead at the time when the Talgunda inscription was engraved. The record moreover speaks of the rule (śāsana) of king (nrpati) Śāntivarman who has been described as paṭṭa-tray-ārpaṇa-virājita-cāru-mūrti which means to say that the king wore three diadems or crowns (paṭṭa; see Raghu, XVIII, v. 44), that is to say, had three kingdoms in his possession. It is not clear whether he received the three paṭṭas from his father or from a Pallava over-lord (Pallavendra Śāntivara of the Hebbata grant?) like his ancestor Mayūraśarman.

It is interesting in this connection to note that the Birur grant (Ep. Carn., VI, p. 91) records the gift of a village in the Sindhuthayā-rāṣṭra, made by the Kadamba Dharma-Mahārāja Viṣṇuvarman with the permission of (anujñāpya) his jyeṣṭhapitā Śāntivarman-dharmamahārāja who has been described as vaijayantī-tilaka-samagra-karṇāṭa-bhūvarga-bhartā. If this Śāntivarman is to be identified with the son of Kākusthavarman, one of the latter's three paṭṭas seems to refer to the kingdom of his feudatory Viṣṇuvarman. Another paṭṭa possibly refers to the Vaijayantī (Banavāsī) division of the Karṇāṭa country, which appears to have been under the direct rule of Śāntivarman.

If the above identification is to be accepted (see infra), we see that the Kadamba king Kṛṣṇavarman I (father of Viṣṇuvarman) who celebrated the Aśvamedha, and was a very powerful ruler and possibly had the whole of Karṇāṭa (consisting of three kingdoms?) under him, was a son of Kākusthavarman and a younger brother of Śāntivarman who was the *jyeṣṭha-pitā*¹ (father's elder brother) of Viṣṇuvarman. We also see that Kṛṣṇavarman I who was presumably dead when his son

Viṣṇuvarman was Dharma-Mahārāja under his jyeṣṭha-pitā ruled before his elder brother Sāntivarman. It will be seen below that the great Kṛṣṇavarman was defeated and probably killed in a battle with the Pallavas. May this fact suggest that, after the death of Kṛṣṇavarman who usurped the throne, the rightful heir of Kākusthavarman got the possession of the entire Karnāṭa country with the help of the Pallavas who defeated the usurper ?¹ It is also to be noted that according to the Hebbata grant Viṣṇuvarman himself is also known to have been anointed by a Pallava king. *

An inscription in front of the Durgi temple at Jambhalli in the Sorab taluka (Ep. Carn., VIII, Sb. 44) has been attributed by Moraes to the Kadamba king Sāntivarman, son of Kākusthavarman. This record was written by Kannaya, the minister for peace and war. According to it, when Sāntivarm-arasa was ruling the [Banavāsī] Twelve Thousand, Kannaya built two temples and made a tank ; having come and seen them, the king granted a mattal of riceland to the priest of the temples. The inscription however is in the Kannaḍa language and bears the date Śaka 894 (A D. 972). There is therefore no reason to believe that it belongs to the Kadamba king Sāntivarman who ruled about the middle of the fifth century. Sāntivarm-arasa of the Jambhalli record obviously belonged to a vice-regal family that ruled Banavāsī under the Rāṣṭrakūṭas.² The fact that the date of the inscription falls about the decline of the Rāṣṭrakūṭa power in A.D. 973, possibly explains why the name of the overlord is not mentioned in the record.

Śāntivarman appears to have been succeeded by his son Mrgeśavarman whose last known date is year eight of his reign. The king was matrimonially connected with the Kekayas whose dominions appear to have comprised the present Chitaldrug district in north-eastern Mysore. An inscription (Mys. Arch. Rep., 1911, pp. 33, 35) on the left jamb of the doorway of the Praṇaveśvara temple at Talgunda describes queen Prabhāvatī, dear wife of Mrgeśavarman-Dharmamahārāja and mother of Ravivarman-Dharmamahārāja, as kaikeya-mahākula-prasūtā. The inscription obviously recorded a grant made by Prabhāvatī; but only the beginning of the record survives.

The following inscriptions of Mrgeśavarman's time have been discovered :—

I. The Banavasi grant (Ind. Ant., VII, pp. 35-36) begins with practically the same verse¹ as is found at the end of the Devagiri plates of Yuvarāja Devavarman, son of Kṛṣṇavarman I. It is in adoration of the Arhat, the lord of the three worlds.

The grant was issued under the asterism Uttarabhādrapada on the tenth lunar day of the Bahula (sic. Sukla)-pakṣa of Kārttika in Mrgeśavarman's third regnal year which was a Pauṣa samvatsara, when the king was at Vaijayantī. We have already tried to show that the date corresponds to October 24, A.D. 437, and to October 27, A.D. 472, of which the latter appears to be the actual date of Mrgeśavarman's grant.

In this record Mrgeśavarman is called the son of Śāntivarman and born in the family of Kākustha. Another important point is that it describes the Kadambas not only as Mānavya-sagotra but also as Āṅgīrasa which appears to show that the family actually belonged to the Āṅgīrasa gotra.

Rāg-ādy-ari-haro = 'nanto = 'nanta-jñāna-drg = iśvaraḥ

The grant records the gift of some black-soil lands (kṛṣṇabhūmi-kṣetra), forty nivartanas by the royal measure, in the village called Br̥hat-Paralūra to the devine supreme Arhat whose feet are rubbed by the tiara of the lord of gods, for the purpose of the glory of sweeping out the temple, anointing the idol with ghee, performing worship and repairing anything that may be broken (samniārjan-opalepan-ābhycarana-bhagnasaṃskāra-mahimā). These forty nivartanas of land lay within the western boundary of the village. A field, four nivartanas by the ordinary measure (kṣetra-nivartana), was also granted along with one nivartana outside the Caityālaya for the purpose of decorating the idol with flowers, and one nivartana that was the measure of the aṅgaṇa (court-yard) of the devakula.

The grant quotes the usual imprecatory verses and refers to the unresumable character of lands that have been given with libations of water, enjoyed by three generations and have been preserved by good people.

The paṭṭikā (grant) is said to have been written by Dāmakīrti-Bhojaka.

II. Another Banavasi grant (Ind. Ant., VII, pp. 37-38) of śrī-vijaya-siva-Mr̥geśavarman¹ was issued on the full-moon day of the eighth fortnight of Varsā (rainy season) in the fourth year of the king who was residing at Vaijayantī. The form of dating refers to a primitive division of the year into three seasons of eight fortnights each. Traces of this primitive division are to be found in the ancient ¹ K. B. Pathak on the strength of this form of the name identified (Ind. Ant., XIV, p. 16), Mr̥geśavarman with Mahārāja Sivakumāra who is mentioned by Bāla-chandra in his introductory remarks on the Prākṛtasūtra, as having for his preceptor the wellknown ācārya Padmanandi-Kuṇḍakunda. The identification is fantastic.

Indian custom of performing cāturmāsya (four-monthly) sacrifices at the beginning of each season on the full-moon days of the months of Phālguna, Āṣāḍha and Kārttika. In connection with the above date of Mrgeśavarman's record it is interesting to note that an inscription of his son Ravivarman is dated on the tenth lunar day of the sixth fortnight of Hemanta (winter). It is also to be noted that both of these grants record some gifts made in favour of Jain ascetics. It is therefore almost certain that the ancient form of dating in these cases was due to Jain influence. To the ascetics of ancient times the year seems to have been divided into three seasons, viz., grīṣma, varṣā and hemanta, each of which was subdivided into eight fortnights.

In this record the vaṃśas of the king's father and mother are said to have been pure. Mrgeśa himself is described as learned in various śāstras and skilled in exercises like riding. He is also said to have fought in many battles and acquired much wealth by the power of his arms. He was a giver of cows, lands, gold, clothes, food and many other things.

By this grant, śrī-vijaya-śiva-Mrgeśavarman, the Dharma-mahārāja of the Kadambas, made a gift of the village called Kālavaṅgā. The village was divided into three equal portions, the first of which was given to the holy Arhat and great Jinendra residing in the Purva-mahac-chālā; the second portion was granted for the enjoyment of a saṃgha (sect) of the Svetapaṭa¹ (i.e., Svetāmbara Jain) Mahāśramanas, and the third for the enjoyment of a saṃgha of the Nirgrantha (i.e., Digambara Jain) Mahāśramanas. Future kings are requested to protect the grant according to the devabhoga-samaya in order to provide money for deva-bhāga, dhānya, deva-pūjā, vali, caru, deva-karma-kara and bhagna-kriyā-pravartana. The record ends with the usual verses.

The charter was written by a senāpati named Naravara. The seal attached to the plates is indistinct, but seems to bear the device of the sitting or standing figure of a god or man. According to Fleet, the figure may be meant for a Jinendra. This suggestion however cannot be accepted until it is definitely proved that Mrgeśavarman was a Jain.

III. In the Hire-Sakuna grant (Ep. Carn., VIII, p. 12) the king has been called Mrgeśavaravarman and the son of Kākustha's dear son. It was issued on the full-moon day of Vaiśākha in the eighth regnal year of the king when he was residing at Vaijayantī.

The grant records the gift of a village called Kadaḷa-kaḷani and some vāstuka-kṣetra (house-site) along with Perddalā to a Brāhmaṇa named Kratusomaśarman who seems to have belonged to the Gautama gotra. In connection with the boundary of the lands are mentioned Virajā which seems to have been a river, a field called Karvvelli, a river called Veṇṇa, Palavakkeṇi, Kadailkūra, Kāḍakorasa and a confluence of rivers (Virajā and Veṇṇa?). The bhojakas or free-holders of the locality were informed of the king's grant (deśa-grāma-grāma-bhojakānāṃ śrāvita-śrāvaṇam kṛtvā). The village was granted all the parihāras and was made a-bhaṭa-praveśa. The record ends with the usual verses.

IV. The adoration with which the Halsi grant (Ind. Ant., VI, p. 24) of Mrgeśavarman's eighth regnal year begins is the same as that at the beginning of Kākusthavarman's grant. In this record the king has been called a dharma-vijayī and has been described as the dear eldest son of Sāntivaravarman and the grandson of Kākusthavarman. He is also called the uprooter of the Gaṅgas (tuṅgu-gaṅga-kul-otsādī) and the very fire of destruction to the Pallavas (pallava-pralay-ānala). We have seen that Mrgeśa possibly began to rule in A.D. 470. His Gaṅga contemporary therefore seems to have been either Āyyavarman who was installed by the Pallava king Simhavarman (436-37 to circa 458 A.D.) of Kāñcī or probably Āyyavarman's son Mādhava-Simhavarman whose Penukonda plates have been assigned by Fleet to circa 475 A.D. Mrgeśa's Pallava contemporary was probably king Skandavarman, the son of Simhavarman and the overlord of the Gaṅga king Mādhava-Simhavarman (see above, p. 176).¹ The reference to the Pallava overlords together with their Gaṅga feudatories appears to prove that Mrgeśavarman had to fight hard with his eastern neighbours.

While residing at the city of Vaijayantī, the king, through devotion for his father who was dead, caused to be built a jñālaya at the city of Palāśikā and gave to the holy Arhats thirty-three nivartanas of land between the river Māṭṛsarit and the sacred confluence of rivers (Māṭṛsarit and Inḡiṇī ?) called the Inḡiṇī-saṃgama. The grant was made for the benefit of the Yāpanīyas, Nirgranthas and the Kūrcakas who were apparently sects of Jain ascetics. Nirgrantha is the same as the Dīgambara sect. The word yāpanīya seems to signify "those who go away," i.e., the mendicants who are going away and not staying.

The date of the grant is given as the full-moon day of the month of Kārttika in the king's eighth regnal year which was a Vaiśākha samvatsara. We have already seen that the tenth tithi of the bright half of Kārttika of his third year fell in the Pauṣa samvatsara. This fact seems to show that the same lunar day of the next Vaiśāka saṃvatsara fell in his seventh regnal year. We are possibly to suppose that the eighth year of Mrgeśa's reign began in between the sukla-daśamī and the full-moon day of Kārttika. The king then would appear to have ascended the throne on a day between those two tithis.

The executor (ājñapti) of the grant was a Bhojaka named Dāmakīrti; all other functions were performed by the Āyuktaka Jiyanta. According to Fleet, Bhojaka is the name of a class of officiating priests in Jain temples. It is however generally taken in the sense of free-holder (inām-dār) which seems to be better. It may be noticed that a person named Śrutakīrti who has been called a senāpati (general) in the grant of Kākusthavarman has been mentioned as Bhoja Śrutakīrti in an undated Halsi grant of Ravivarman. Āyuktaka generally means the governor of a district. Jiyanta who has been called sarvasy=ānuṣṭhātā was probably entrusted with the construction of the Jinālaya.

The grant ends with the usual imprecatory verses and the maṅgala : siddhīr=astu.

V. The Hitnabhebbagilu grant (Ep. Carn., IV, p. 130; Hs. 18) of śrī-vijaya-sīva-Mrgeśavarman begins not with the usual adoration to Jinendra, but with a verse adoring lord Brahman.¹ It must be noted in this connection that this grant was made in favour not of any Jain institution but of a Brāhmaṇa, described as an ātharvanika and veda-vedāṅga-vit. Are we to suppose that Kīrtivara, the writer of the present record, was a Brahmanical Hindu worshipper of Brahman, while the grants showing considerable Jain influence were written by devout Jain officials of the king? It is known that Mrgeśavarman and Ravivarman favoured Jainism; but it is not definitely known whether they were Jains themselves. While in this record the king is called dharmañña like Yudhiṣṭhira, satyavādī like Pratardana and brahmanyā like Viṣṇu, his Banavasi grant, as we have already seen, describes the supreme Arhat as having his feet rubbed by the tiara of Indra. It is thus difficult in the present state of our knowledge to form a definite idea about the religion of Mṛgeśavarman.

The Hitnahebbagilu grant was issued on the tenth lunar day of the bright half of Mārgaśīras when the king was residing at Vaijayantī. Mṛgeśavarmān is described as a giver of cows, lands, villages, gold and other things (gosahasra-nava-kṣetrahala-dhañṇi?-grāma-hirany-ādī).

The grant records the gift of a village called Kiḷuṇṇī-rilli to a Brāhmaṇa named Sarvasvāmin, son of Piṅgala-svāmin who belonged to the Aupagahaṇi gotra. It was made in accordance with the law of the Brahmadeyas, with libations of water and dakṣiṇā. The village was granted the parihāras called abhāṭa-praveśa and antahkara-viṣṭika which we find referred to in the Kudgere grant of Māndhātṛvarman (Ep. Ind., VI, p. 12). It is also said to have been exempted from paṅgotkoṭa the meaning of which is not quite clear.

Some verses quoted at the end of the record are said to be the words of Bhīṣma and Rāma. The paṭṭikā was written by Kīrtivara.

VIII

RAVIVARMAN

Mṛgeśavarman was succeeded by his son Ravivarman who ruled at least up to the thirty-fifth year of his reign. This king is known to have annexed the Palāśikā division of the Karṇāṭa country to his dominions which probably comprised the Vaijayantī and Uccaśṛṅgī divisions only. A Halsi grant of his son's fourth regnal year (Ind. Ant., VI, pp. 30-31) suggests that the Uccaśṛṅgī division was governed by Ravi's younger (?) brother Śivaratha. Another Halsi grant of Ravivarman describes how the king killed Viṣṇuvarman (son of the usurper Kṛṣṇavarman I), defeated the latter's Pallava allies and established himself at Palāśikā. A damaged stone inscription (Ep. Carn., VIII, p.167) discovered at Kavadi in the Sorab taluka mentions a queen along with the name of Ravivarman, son of Mṛgeśa. The record is written in four lines of verse; the first few letters of the lines however could not be deciphered. The epigraph has been taken to imply that at the death of Ravivarman one of his queens burnt herself with him as a satī. The following records of Ravivarman's time have so far been discovered.

I. The Nilambur grant (Ep. Ind., VIII, p. 146 ff.), of Ravivarman-Dharmamahārāja was issued when the king was at Vaijayantī. In this record the Kadamba family has been described as purified by the avabhṛtha-snāna of the Aśvamedha sacrifice. As we shall see, the only performer of the Aśvamedha among the Early Kadambas was Kṛṣṇavarman I whose descendants generally refer to the celebration of the sacrifice in their grants. The Nilambur grant bears the only instance in which the Aśvamedha of the usurper is referred to in a record of a king of the main line.

By this record the king granted on the full-moon day of Kārttika, for the increase of his own religious merit, a pallī called Muṭtagi which was to the east of a grāma called Kīrūpāsāni in the viṣaya of Mogalūr. The grant was made in favour of a Yajurvedīya Brāhmaṇa named Govinda-svāmin who belonged to the Kāśyapa gotra. Another place called Maḷkāvu was also given along with Muṭtagi. Muṭtagi is mentioned in the Merkera plates of the Gaṅga king Koṅgaṇi-Mahādhiraṇja as the eastern boundary of a village called Badaneguppe which was granted to the Jinālaya of Talavananagara. Talavanapura and Talavananagara were the Sanskrit forms of Taḷekkāḍ or Talakāḍ, the Gaṅga capital, which still exists under the name of Talakāḍ, on the left bank of the river Kāverī about 28 miles to the south-east of Mysore (Bomb. Gaz., I, ii, p. 299). Badaneguppe is five or six miles south of Talakāḍ on the other side of the river. Mogalūr is supposed to be the same as Mugūr or Mullur which is also near Talakāḍ. The grant of two villages so near the Gaṅga capital proves the success of Ravivarman against the Gaṅgas. We have already seen that according to the evidence of a Halsi grant the Gaṅgas were 'uprooted' by the father of Ravivarman before the eighth year of his reign. It is interesting in this connection to note that the Gaṅgas were friendly towards the junior line of Kṛṣṇavarman I. The Gaṅga king Mādhava-Mahādhiraṇja is known to have married a granddaughter of Viṣṇuvarman who, as we shall see, was killed by Ravivarman before the eleventh year of Ravi's reign. Gaṅga Avinīta-Koṅgaṇi, son of Mādhava, has been described in the Gaṅga records as the beloved sister's son of Kṛṣṇavarman, evidently Kṛṣṇavarman II, grandson of Viṣṇuvarman (see infra).

The grant is said to have been made with gold and with libations of water. All the parihāras were granted.

Those who might confiscate the lands are said to be committing the pañca-mahāpātaka, while those who would protect the grant are said to be acquiring religious merit. The record ends with the imprecatory verses and with the mangala: svasty=astu go-brāhmaṇebhyaḥ, prajābhyo mangalam.

II. The Halsi grant (Ind. Ant., VI, p. 28) of Rājā Bhānuvarman is dated on the tenth lunar day of the sixth fortnight of Hemanta in the eleventh year of the reign of his elder brother Ravivarma-Dharmamahārāja. The record begins with the usual adoration to Jinendra-guṇarundra and traces the royal genealogy from Kākusthavarman.

By this grant a piece of land, fifteen nivartanas by the royal measure, in the field called Kardamapaṭī in Palāśikā was assigned in a copper charter and was given to the Jinas by the Bhojaka Paṇḍara who was a worshipper of the supreme Arhat. Paṇḍara is said to have acquired the favour of Rājā Bhānuvarman, younger brother of Mahārāja Ravivarman. The paṭī seems to be the same as paṭṭī or paṭṭikā which as we have seen (above, p. 198) probably means a piece of land.

The lands were given free from the gleanings tax and all other burdens (uñcha-kara-bhar-ādi-vivarjita) in order that the ceremony of ablution might always be performed without fail on days of the full-moon.

Fleet suggested (Ind. Ant., VI, p. 29n) that Bhānuvarman may have ruled conjointly with his elder brother Ravi. The fact that the prince is simply styled Bhānuvarma-rāja while his elder brother has been called Dharma-mahārāja renders this theory untenable. Bhānuvarman seems to have been the governor of Palāśikā under king Ravivarman.

The grant ends with the usual impecatory verses. The seal attached to the plates is indistinct.

III. The Sirsi grant (Ep. Ind., XVI, p. 264) of Ravivarman's thirty-fifth year was issued when the king was at Vaijayantī. Ravivarman, the Dharma-mahārāja of the Kadambas, is said to have been *kadamba-mahāsenāpati-pratima*¹ and atyanta-pitṛ-bhakta. The grant records the gift of four nivartanas of land at Sāregrāma to the temple of Mahādeva (mahādev-āyatana) that belonged to the desā-mātya named Nīlakaṇṭha who was the king's priya-vaidyā (favourite physician). The grant was made on the fifth lunar day of the bright half of Kārttika in the thirty-fifth year of Ravivarman's reign. The land is said to have been in a field called Bāṇdupukropi which lay between two tanks called Bāmbāre-taḍāga and Dāsa-taḍāga. The record mentions a Brāhmana named Bharadvājārya who belonged to the Kāśyapa gotra and was possibly also called Svāmi-pāśupata. He seems to have been the chief priest of the temple of Mahādeva.

IV. The undated Halsi grant (Ind. Ant, VI, pp. 25-26) which begins with the usual adoration to Jinendraguṇarundra records an interesting history of a family that was favoured by Kākusthavarman and his descendants. It says that in former time the Bhoja named Śrutakīrti who acquired great favour of the Kadamba king Kākusthavarman enjoyed the village of Kheṭa. We have seen that Kākusthavarman granted a field called Badovara in the village of Kheṭa to the senāpati Śrutakīrti for saving him. When Śrutakīrti died, Kākustha's son Śāntivarman was ruling the country. Then the village was again granted to the mother of Dāmakīrti (son of Śrutakīrti?) by Śāntivarman's son Mrgeśavarman for the sake of piety and in accordance with the direction of his father. The eldest son of Dāmakīrti was the pratihāra (door-keeper) Jayakīrti whose family is said to have been established in the world by an ācārya (or the ācāryas) called Bandhuṣena. In order to increase his good fortune, fame and family and for the sake of religious merit, Jayakīrti, through the favour of king Ravi, gave the village of Puru-Kheṭaka (i.e., larger Kheṭa or Kheṭaka) to the mother of his own father.

The grant further records that the lord Ravi established his ordinance at the great city of Palāśikā that Jinendra's glory, the festival of which used to last for eight days, should be celebrated regularly every year on the full-moon day of Kārttika from the revenues of that village; that the learned men who were ascetics of the Yāpanīya sect and the chief amongst whom was Kumāradatta should, according to justice, enjoy all the material substance of that greatness during the four months of the rainy season; and that the worship of Jinendra should be perpetually performed by the pious countrymen and citizens.

The record says, "That (land, etc.)—which has been conveyed by copper-charters under some ordinances accepted by previous kings—should be preserved by the king not inattentive to religion, having pondered over the misfortunes of being born again and again," and quotes the usual imprecatory verses. It also says that the grant which is bestowed with libations of water, is enjoyed by three generations, is preserved by good people and the grants which have been made by former kings are not resumed."

The record ends with the adoration namo=namaḥ and says, "Wheresoever the worship of Jinendra is kept up there is increase of the country; and the cities are free from fear; and the lords of those countries acquire strength."

V. Another undated Halsi grant (Ind. Ant., VI, pp. 29-30) of Ravivarman records that the king granted four nivartanas of land to Jinendra. The actual donor of the land seems to have been Śrīkīrti, brother of Dāmakīrti; the object of the grant was the increase of the religious merit of Dāmakīrti's mother. There are the usual imprecatory verses at the end of the record.

The most interesting point in the record is that it describes Ravivarman as established at Palāśikā after conquering the whole world, killing Viṣṇuvarman and other kings and uprooting Caṇḍadaṇḍa, the lord of Kāñcī.¹ The descendants of the usurper were hostile to the kings of the main line. Viṣṇuvarman however seems to have had to accept for some time the suzerainty of Śāntivarman. We have seen that, according to the Halsi grant of the eighth year of Mrgeśavarman, the king while residing at Vaijayantī built a Jinālaya at the city of Palāśikā and gave to the holy Arhat thirty-three nivartanas of land between the Māṭṛsarit and the Inṅinī confluence. It possibly shows that Viṣṇuvarman ruled at Palāśikā as a vassal of the Vaijayantī kings at least up to the eighth year of Mrgeśavarman's reign.² The reference to his fight with Ravivarman shows that, possibly after the death of Mrgeśa, Viṣṇuvarman rebelled against the authority of the main line. The mention of the defeat and death of Viṣṇuvarman in connection with the establishment of Ravivarman at Palāśikā seems to suggest that the former was a king of the Palāśikā division of the Karṇāṭa country. We have already seen that Ravi's

M. Govind Pai says (Journ Ind Hist., XIII, pp 29-30) : "..... when after the death of Kṛṣṇavarman I his son Viṣṇuvarman ascended the Kadamba throne, his cousin-brother (?) Ravivarman of the senior branch fought with him and defeated him and his Pallava ally Caṇḍadaṇḍa, seized the Kadamba crown and enthroned himself as king. As a consequence, Viṣṇuvarman was obliged to remove his court to a place called Kuṇḍalūr (whence he issued his Hebbata grant) . . ." The verse however clearly says that Viṣṇuvarman was killed and could not therefore have removed to Kudalūr after the battle. As has already been pointed out, Viṣṇuvarman was possibly the king of the Palāśikā division and not of the whole Kadamba country.

² It may also be suggested that Viṣṇuvarman originally ruled at the city of Kudalūr whence his Hebbata grant was issued and that he occupied Palāśikā when he rebelled against his overlords of the Vaijayantī house.

younger brother Bhānuvarman was ruling at Palāśikā in the eleventh year of his elder brother's reign. The death of Viṣṇuvarman therefore seems to have occurred before the eleventh year of Ravi. Since Ravi appears to have ascended the throne earlier than A.D. 503, the date of Viṣṇuvarman's death appears to have fallen in the ninth or tenth decade of the fifth century.

As we have already suggested (above, p. 182) Caṇḍadaṇḍa, described as the lord of Kāñcī, may have been a biruda of Pallava Nandivarman (issuer of the Udayendiram grant) or of one of his successors. Since the twenty-second year of Nandivarman's grandfather Siṃhavarman is known from the Lokavibhāga to have fallen in A.D. 458, the above suggestion does not appear improbable.

The seal attached to the plates is said to have the device of a dog.

. HARIVARMAN

Ravivarman was succeeded by his son Harivarman who is the last known king of the main line. According to a late record (Ep. Carn., VIII, Nr. 35, p. 134) an early Sāntara chief, named Tyāgi-Sāntara, married the daughter of a Kadamba king, named Harivarman. This Kadamba Harivarman seems to be no other than the son of Ravivarman. Harivarman possibly began to reign in A.D. 538. About this time the Calukyas under Pulakeśin I became the greatest political power in Western Deccan and the Kadambas of Kuntala began to decline. It is not known whether Harivarman was a contemporary of Pulakeśin I. The Calukya king however seems to have come into conflict with the Kadambas in connection with the Aśvamedha which he performed.¹ Calukya Kirtivarman I, son and successor of Pulakeśin I, has actually been said to have defeated the king of Vaijayantī in the Mahakuta pillar inscription of Maṅgaleśa (Ind. Ant., XIX, p. 16 ff.). In the Aihole inscription (Ep. Ind., VI, p. 4 ff.) of Pulakeśin II, Kirtivarman I has been described as the very night of destruction to the Nalas, Mauryas and Kadambas. A reference to kadamba-kadamba-kadambaka in the Aihole record appears to suggest that Kīrtivarman I had to fight with the combined army of a confederacy of Kadamba kings. It will be seen below that in the sixth century there were other ruling branches of the Kadamba family than the lines of Śāntivarman and Kṛṣṇavarman I. In several grants, Kīrtivarman I is described as "establishing the banner of his pure fame in the territories of the hostile kings of Vanavāsī and other (cities) that had been invaded by his prowess" (Bomb. Gaz., I, ii, p. 346). After the death of Maṅgaleśa, there was a general renunciation of allegiance by the subordinate peoples, and Pulakeśin II had to reduce Banavāsī once again (ibid., p. 350). In the Lakshmeswar inscription (Ind. Ant., VII, p. 111), Calukya Vikramāditya I is said to have defeated the Kadambas. The Bennur grant (Ep. Carn., V, p. 594) of Kṛṣṇavarman II, grandson of the ill-fated Viṣṇuvarman who was defeated and killed by Ravivarman before the eleventh year of his reign, describes Kṛṣṇavarman II as set out on an expedition against Vaijyantī (vaijyantī-vijaya-yātrām = abhiprāsthita). In the nineteenth year of Kṛṣṇavarman (II)'s reign however we find the king stationed at Vaijyantī (cf. Sirsi grant; Ep. Ind., XVI, p. 268). It is not impossible that Kṛṣṇavarman II defeated Harivarman and occupied the throne of Vaijyantī before the nineteenth year of his reign.

1. The Halsi grant (Ind. Ant., VI, pp. 30-31) of Harivarman was issued in the fourth year of his reign on the thirteenth lunar day of the bright half of Phālguna. It says that, at Uccaśṛṅgī, the king, at the advice of his father's brother (pitṛvya), named Sivaratha, gave such a promise as gladdened the heart of all people. In accordance with that promise, he made Candrakṣānta the principal donee and gave to the possession of the saṃgha (sect) of Vāriṣeṇācārya of the Kūrcakas the village of Vasuntavātaka in the viṣaya, called Suddikundūra,¹ with all the parihāras. The grant was made for the purpose of providing annually, at the great eight days' sacrifice, the perpetual anointing with clarified butter (car-ūpalepana-kriy-ārtham) for the temple of the Arhat ; whatever might remain over after that was to be devoted to the purpose of feeding the whole sect (or all sects ; cf. sarva-saṃgha-bhojanāya). The temple of the Arhat is said to have been built at Palāśikā by Mrgeśa,² son of the general Siṃha who belonged to the Bhāradvāja gotra.

The grant quotes the usual imprecatory verses and ends with a verse saying, "May the practice of sitting in abstract meditation which is the doctrine of the Arhat Vardhamāna and by which is effected even in the present age the destruction of the sins of worldly existence, flourish." It further adds an adoration to Vardhamāna, the last and the most celebrated of the Arhats of this age.

II. The grants of the early Kadambas generally begin with the word svasti or siddham. The Halsi grants of king Harivarman (Ind. Ant., VI, pp. 31-32 ; also pp. 30-31) however have both of these words at the beginning. The present grant was issued in the fifth year of Harivarman's reign when the king seems to have been residing at the adhiṣṭhāna of Palāśikā. The word adhiṣṭhāna generally means a city ; sometimes it also signifies the capital of a king. Palāśikā was possibly a secondary capital of the kings

² Siṃha may have been the general of Mrgeśavarman and named his son after his master of Vaijayantī from the time of Viṣṇuvarman's death and the annexation of the Palāśikā division by Ravivarman.

The grant records the gift of a village, called Marade, for the use of the holy people (sādhu-jan-opayog-ārtham) and for the purpose of pūjā-saṁskāra of a Caityālaya. The Caityālaya is said to have been the property of a sect of Śramaṇas, called Ahariṣṭi (ahariṣṭi-saṁāhvaya-saṁgh-ānvaya-vastu). The Head of the Caityālaya was possibly the ācārya Dharmānandin. The word śramaṇa signifies a Buddhist or a Jain religious mendicant or ascetic. The favour shown by Harivarman and his forefathers to the Jains suggests that this Caityālaya was a Jain temple. Jain adorations and maṅgalas are however absent in this record. Was it written by a non-Jain ?

The grant is said to have been made at the request of a Rājā, named Bhānuśakti, who belonged to the Sendraka family. The Sendraka chief Bhānuśakti who appears to have been the ruler of the Palāśikā division was evidently a feudatory of Harivarman.

Like other grants of the family, the record ends with some imprecatory verse. The seal attached to the plates bears the legend śrī-harivarmanā which is preceded and followed by svastika.

III. The Sangoli grant (Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 165) of Harivarman begins with a verse ¹ adoring lord Sambhu, and the king is expressly said to have been a parama-māheśvara (devout worshipper of Maheśvara). We have seen that, like many of the grants of Kākusthavarman, Mrgeśavarman and Ravivarman, the composition of the Halsi grant (No. 1) of Harivarman exhibits remarkable influence of Jainism. That Kākusthavarman and Śāntivarman were also favourable to Śaivism as they were to Jainism is proved by the Talgunda inscription. If it is not supposed that Harivarman became a parama-māheśvara after the date of his Halsi records, it may possibly be suggested that the early Kadambas of the main line were Śaivas, who were exceptionally tolerant towards Jainism.¹ It is clear that many officials of the Kadamba kings were Jains; it is also known that a general, named Śrutakīrti, who was evidently a Jain, once saved the life of Kākusthavarman.

The grant was issued when the king was at Vaijayantī. The date of the record is given as the Viṣupa or Viṣuva day on the Amāvāsyā of Āśvayuja in the eighth year of Harivarman's reign. It has been found to correspond with Tuesday, September 22, A.D. 526 and with Thursday, September 21, A.D. 545. Mr. K. N. Dikshit who edited the Sangoli grant rightly prefers the second date. Kadamba Harivarman thus appears to have ascended the throne about A.D. 538.

The grant records the gift of a village, called Tedāva, with the pravibhāgas (literally, divisions; sic. parihāras?), dakṣiṇā and libations of water. The recipients were Śivaśarman, Prajāpatiśarman, Dhātṛśarman, Nandiśarman and Dharmaśarman of the Kaimbala gotra; Vaikuṇṭhaśarman, Vasuśarman, Nāgaśarman and Maṇḍanaśarman of the Kālāśa gotra; Viṣṇuśarman, Prajāpatiśarman and Piṭṛśarman of the Garga gotra; Kumāraśarman, Tvaṣṭṛśarman, Skandaśarman and Varuṇaśarman of the Kotsa gotra; Yaśośarman, Āryaśarman, Paśupatiśarman and Mitraśarman of the Śriviṣṭha gotra; Vanaśarman of the Cauliya gotra; Prajāpatiśarman of the Valandata gotra; and Kumāraśarman of the Kāśyapa gotra.

prajābhyah. The adoration to the Hindu Trinity (viz., Hari, Hara, and Hiranyagarbha, i.e., Brahman) in a record wherein the king has been described as a devotee of Maheśvara seems to suggest that Harivarman was a Brahmanical Hindu with sense of exceptional religious toleration.
